Premier Seeks Stronger League to Strengthen French Defense.

Spurns England's Plan of 'Isolation'

Baldwin Gets Vote of Confidence on British Sanctions Stand.

The Situation Abroad.

France's new Socialist premier, Leon Blum, announced his government's foreign policy by which he hopes to strengthen the League of Nations and insure French security. He was upheld by a vote of confidence in the Chamber of Deputies.

Prime Minister Stanley Baldwin won a vote of confidence in the British House of Commons on his government's decision to lift sanctions from Italy after the step had been criticized bitterly in Commons debate.

At the conference called to act upon Turkey's demand to remilitarize the Dardanelles, France, Russia and Rumania united to demand that the straits be kept open for movement of their fleets in event of war with Germany.

New Policy Upheld.

By the Associated Press.

Paris, June 23.—The Socialist government opened a fight to strengthen the League of Nations and France's position in Europe, backed by a vote of confidence tonight from the Chamber of Deputies.

The deputies approved Premier Leon Blum's declaration of foreign policy, made today, by a vote of 382 to 198 after a ten-hour debate.

In its first declaration of a foreign policy, the Leftist cabinet proposed:

1. That war be made on an aggressor by a group of League powers, "whether the grouping results from a given geographical situation or from a community of interests."

2. That League members be given the right to take "preventive measures" in the event aggression was threatened.

Under the first proposal, France could keep her close alliances with Soviet Russia and the little entente, instead of perhaps facing "isolation" under the British plan for regional groups alone.

The second proposal, involving a change in the League Covenant, would allow France to mobilize if a German attack was believed imminent.

Explains Sanctions Policy.

Today's declaration, made by Premier Blum and Foreign Minister Yvon Delbos in the senate and chamber of deputies, explained France's willingness to remove sanctions from Italy and announced the government would move to hasten the negotiation of three mutual assistance pacts under the League.

One would apply to Western Europe, the second to the Danubian basin, the third to the Mediterranean.

The proposed pact of all Mediterranean nations was declared necessary "so no dominance might be instituted" in the region.

Officials said this would not only end the Italo-British struggle for Mediterranean supremacy, but would enable both nations to cooperate with France and assure her equality.

The Leftist premier, expressing a "sincere desire" to find a basis of accord on security with Germany, declared he did not doubt Adolf Hitler's word on peace "as the word of a war veteran who, for four years, knew the misery of the trenches."

France, Blum stated, counts on the "cordial sentiments" of the United States. Delbos, reading the declaration in the chamber, changed the phrase to "sympathies."

Coincident with the declaration, France sent 30,000 more soldiers to her northern and eastern frontiers.

Stabbed at Prison

AL CAPONE.

Convict Stabs Capone, Terms Him 'Squealer'

Texan, 22, Uses Scissors Blade for Alcatraz Prison Assault.

Al Capone, deposed king of a once vast Chicago gang empire, was stabbed in the back in Alcatraz Prison yesterday by a fellow convict, enraged because he believed the Nation's first public enemy No. 1 to be a squealer.

In its announcement of the attack, the Department of Justice said Capone's wound "appears to be superficial."

Capone's attacker, the department announced, was James C. Lucas, 22, of Abilene, Tex., who was sent to the dread island prison in 1934 for 99 years upon conviction of bank robbery in Albany, Tex.

Capone was working in the clothing shop, his back turned to Lucas. According to a report given the Associated Press by the prison warden, James A. Johnson, Lucas tore apart a pair of scissors and thrust one blade into the back of the unsuspecting Capone after taking a run of 10 feet.

Capone whirled as the point pierced the lower left side of his back and with a single punch sent his attacker rolling on the floor.

A guard standing 15 feet away, separated the men and Lucas was taken to solitary confinement. Capone walked to the prison infirmary.

"Capone's wound doesn't seem to be serious," Johnston told the Associated Press. "The blade, about 4 inches long, penetrated one-quarter of an inch and made a cut about one-half inch long.

Details Revealed.

"Lucas got the scissors from the barber shop and separated the blades. The attack occured between the clothing room and the barber shop. Both are in the basement across from the bathing place and there is only about 10 feet between them."

The former gang chief told prison authorities he had been beseeched by Lucas for financial aid which he refused. Lucas insisted the motive for the attack was his belief that Capone had informed against him.

First announcement of the attack tice in Washington. Details were later provided from the prison. The came from the Department of Justannouncement was made late in the afternoon, though Warden Johnson fixed the time of the attack between 9:30 and 9:45 a. m., Pacific time.

Both in the Federal penitentiary at Atlanta, Ga., where he was sent

Officials Send Zioncheck to Md. Hospital

Three days before a scheduled sanity hearing in District Supreme Court, Representative Marion A. Zioncheck was transferred late yesterday from Gallinger Municipal Hospital to a private institution at Towson, Md., suburb of Baltimore.

Strapped in a strait jacket and shouting protests, the Washington State Democrat was carried on a stretcher from his psychopathic ward to a waiting Board of Welfare ambulance. Followed by a motorcade of press cars, he was whisked through heavy, rush-hour traffic at a 40-mile-an-hour clip.

Last minute arrangements, expected each day for nearly a week, were finally completed by Zioncheck's young bride, the former Rubye Louise Nix, one-time PWA stenographer. District and court authorities agreed to the removal on condition Zioncheck be committed to the Sheppard and Enoch Pratt Hospital for an indefinite period.

Hearing Is Canceled.

His transfer canceled the lunacy hearing ordered by the District Commissioners for Friday. A petition, describing Zioncheck as a "dangerous person," filed in District Supreme Court several days ago will be voided when the case is called, officials indicated.

T. Gillespie Walsh, assistant corporation counsel, said the jury hearing scheduled in District Supreme Court to determine Zioncheck's sanity, would be dismissed.

The transfer to the private institution was ordered after a conference attended by Walsh, Justice Daniel W. O'Donoghue and Zioncheck's bride.

Hurried arrangements to move the Representative from Gallinger were made by Dr. Edgar A. Bocock, superintendent, when he was notified of plans late yesterday. Nurses, doctors and orderlies went to Zioncheck's room to prepare him for the trip.

But, according to reports at the hospital, the Seattle Representative refused to leave. Clarence E. Geiger, transfer officer of the Board of Public Welfare, attempted to persuade Zioncheck to dress and submit to the wishes of relatives and accompany him to a waiting automobile.

Pleas Are Changed.

When it became evident, however, that their patient would resist, authorities hastily changed plans. An ambulance was substituted for the automobile and orderlies were instructed to place Zioncheck in a "pack"—tight wrapping in sheets—described as an effective straitjacket.

A corps of photographers, reporters and hospital attendants gathered at the psychopathic building entrance as Zioncheck was carried out. Twisting his head—the only movable part of his body—from side to side, the Representative shouted:

"They are taking me against my will . . . they are removing me from the court's jurisdiction after I accepted papers calling for a sanity hearing . . . my left side is paralyzed . . . it took eight orderlies to strap me in this jacket—they've got handcuffs on me."

As he was being placed in the ambulance, Zioncheck called to reporters to "help him out." He asked them to ride with him, or follow

Train Crash Hurts 35 Near St. Louis

St. Louis, June 23 (AP).—Twelve trainmen and 23 colored passengers were injured, none of them critically, when a Missouri Pacific special collided head-on with a cattle train near Valley Park in St. Louis County today.

The passenger train was a special carrying 164 colored persons to a Baptist Young People's Union meeting at Kansas City.

The accident occurred at the west end of a stretch of single track. The freight train was reported standing still and the passenger train running at reduced speed when they struck. No cars were derailed.

Wagner to Whip Group Into Shape for Consideration Today.

By Robert C. Albright,

Philadelphia, June 23.—A briefly stated, leftist platform, perhaps the shortest and most liberal in political history, and approved in all of its details by President Roosevelt, was ready for the routine approval of a resolutions committee proceeding under the technical assumption that it must hold hearings and write one of its own.

Pressing the Constitution to the limit of its flexibility, heldging the issue of a return to the gold standard, and projecting into the campaign most of the policies of the New Deal, the preliminary outline is in the possession of Senator Robert F. Wagner, of New York, who put in a tardy appearance this morning.

Wagner will meet with members of his newly appointed resolutions committe tomorrow morning for organization purposes, and the group will go through the motions of hearings almost immediately. Some time Thursday the platform probably will be in shape for publication.

Plank on Constitution.

Best information here is that the major planks will line up approximately as follows:

Constitution—Reassertion of the rights of the States and the Federal Government to meet social and economic problems within the Constitution. "Clarification" of the definition of interstate commerce and insistence on a field for wages and hours regulation. Whether a constitutional amendment will be specifically mentioned is still in dispute, but if named at all it probably will be qualified by the question of necessity.

Money—Declaration for sound currency and for stabilization, coupled with defense of devaluation policy, but probably with no emphatic declaration against a return to the gold standard.

Farm—General statements in favor of soil conservation, improvement in farm markets and indorsement of co-operative movements, supplemented by much stronger declarations if Secretary of Agriculture Wallace has his way. If production control is not mentioned by name, it may be implied from the language. Still in dispute are the questions of crop insurance and Wallace's ever-normal granary plan.

Labor—Restatements of the rights of collective bargaining, coupled with a party frown on company unions. Revision under way to appease John L. Lewis and his United Mine Workers, including recognition of the Federal Government's right to legislate in such fields as bituminous coal control.

Monopoly—Strengthening of the usual stand for strict enforcement of antitrust laws with language that will go further than the Republican platform in satisfying the demands of Senator William H. Borah.

Banking—Affirmation of the policy of Federal bank deposit insur-

Duplicity in Attempts to Please Both East, West Charged.

Text of Farley's Address—Page 6.

By Felix Bruner,
A Staff Correspondent.

Philadelphia, June 23.—James A. Farley, chairman of the Democratic National Committee, flatly accepted the challenge of the Republicans today when he told the Democratic National Convention that the continuance of the New Deal is the issue in the forthcoming campaign.

The question to be determined, he said is "Shall we continue the New Deal which has rescued our country from disaster and despair, or shall the Government be turned back to the Old Dealers who wrecked it?"

Farley called the convention to order at 1:03 p. m. (daylight saving time) for its first session. The delegates listened to a welcoming speech by Mayor Wilson of Philadelphia, and to the talk by Farley. No business was transacted.

The convention went through the usual opening preliminaries with the singing of the "Star-Spangled Banner," a parade of delegates and blaring of the band. For one minute it stood in silence in tribute to the late Will Rogers, who for many years sat in the press section at many previous conventions.

"False Note" Sounded.

The delegates jumped to their feet and cheered as Farley told them that the continuance of the New Deal was the issue. As they cheered, the band played the Roosevelt theme song, "Happy Days Are Here Again." Once, later in the session, it missed the spirit of the thing and played "Sidewalks of New York," made famous as the Alfred E. Smith song, in spite of the fact that Smith has "taken a walk" from the convention.

"The Old Dealers," Farley declared "stand right where they have always stood. The convention at Cleveland, both in manner and method, revealed once more that old habits are not abandoned."

The national chairman appealed to Democrats to do their utmost to swell a majority for Roosevelt. It was the first mention of the President's name in the convention and another demonstration followed.

Alf M. Landon, the Republican nominee, was described by Farley as "a candidate whom they could present as conservative enough to meet the specifications of the duPont Liberty Leaguers in the East, while appearing liberal in the West."

Quotes Editorial.

In discussing the Republican platform, which he said nobody takes seriously, Farley quoted an editorial on the subject which appeared in The Washington Post following adoption of the Cleveland platform.

He quoted the part of The Post editorial which said:

"On the whole the platform avoids the mistake of being too specific, properly concentrating on principles."

He quoted also The Post's comment that the platform of the Republicans contains "not infrequent conflicts between an excellent generality and a stupid particularization."

"The Republican Party," he quoted The Post as saying, "has

Party Shakes Off Tradition, Prepares to Go on Record for Permanent New Deal, With Bureaucracy as Political Philosophy Basis.

By Felix Morley,
Editor of The Post.

Philadelphia, June 23.—Finally cutting loose from its traditions and accepting nearly every challenge hurled by the Republicans at Cleveland, the Democratic Party today ushered in, and then tumultuously acclaimed, a new phase of American history. For the first time a major political party has shown itself prepared to go on record for a strongly centralized form of Government, for rigorous control of private initiative and, if necessary, for far-reaching amendment of the Constitution in order to achieve these ends.

By this turn the exponents of the New Deal cease to regard it as in any sense an emergency program. On the contrary, they acclaim bureaucracy enthusiastically as a desirable political philosophy. So clearly was this demonstrated today, both in the opening address of Postmaster General Farley and in the keynote speech of Senator Barkley, that curiosity as to the exact character of the forthcoming platform already is largely assuaged. Its outlines were clearly defined this morning, when Farley stated at the opening session of the convention that: "The continuance of the New Deal is the issue * * *. There you have the issue stripped of all camouflage."

Bridges Burned.

One cannot help admiring the frankness with which this historic party has burned its bridges behind it and is preparing to march on into territory where heretofore only the Socialists have skirmished. There are, of course, a few defensive outposts left on the conservative side of the stream. Senator Barkley was at some pains to assert that Thomas Jefferson did not really mean it when the traditional founder of the Democratic Party said: "That government is best which governs least."

But such gestures to tradition cannot disguise the magnitude of the step which has been taken. The Rubicon has been crossed. So far as the high command is concerned, Al Smith and his fellow dissenters can make of that action what they will.

Of course there is some dissatisfaction, and perhaps more anxiety,

Calls Landon a Foe Of Bank Insurance

Text of Keynote Address—Pages 4-5.

By Franklyn Waltman,
A Staff Correspondent.

Philadelphia, June 23.—Savagely attacking the Republican party for leading the country during "12 long years" into a morass of economic depression and spiritual bankruptcy, Senator Alben W. Barkley, of Kentucky, in his keynote address to the Democratic national convention, tonight defended the New Deal as the savior of the country and predicted the re-election of President Roosevelt.

The Kentuckian, apparently believing that a good offense is the best defense, scathingly denounced the policies of the three Republican administrations which preceded the New Deal and assailed both the Landon-Knox ticket and the Republican platform.

But the keynoter, amid loud yelling and noisy demonstrations, stanchly defended the New Deal, including its spending, the focal point of Republican attack. He conceded a $10,000,000,000 increase in the debt under the Roosevelt Administration, but held that "we have saved the lives of men and women" and saved the economic structure of the Nation.

Pledges Budget Balance.

Senator Barkley recounted the improved condition of the Nation's banking structure in the last three years, the increase in employment and prices and the rehabilitation of the country's debt structure through New Deal help. His theme was that, although the New Deal had not achieved a balanced budget, it had given the country a balanced recovery.

Interpolating into his prepared speech, Senator Barkley said he was "not worried about balanced budgets" and went on to promise in the name of the New Deal that "we shall balance the budget; we shall soon ordain that no discrepancy between outgo and income shall exist."

Perhaps the most significant part of the keynote address was that which dealt with the Supreme Court and the Constitution. Senator Barkley asserted that "I make no attack on the Supreme Court." He held there was nothing new in controversies over constitutional questions and that when the court split five to four on vital questions, there was justification for Congress and others to take divergent views.

He contended that many of the country's great statesmen—Thomas Jefferson, Andrew Jackson, Abraham Lincoln and Theodore Roosevelt—did not think the court was beyond criticism. Indeed, he showed by quotations, they frequently had criticized the Supreme Court for its decisions.

Hints at Amendment.

The convention delegates roundly applauded these attacks on the high tribunal uttered through the lips of departed statesmen. When Senator Barkley recalled that Theodore Roosevelt in his Bull Moose fight—in which he said both Landon and Knox are proud of their participation—had urged "recall" by the people of Supreme Court decisions, the delegates burst into a piercing yell.

Unusual significance was attached to Senator Barkley's declaration that "what we need is a new definition and a new interpretation of interstate commerce" and he proceeded to define the term by asserting that "every article that is made in one State and destined for another by whatever means of transportation is an object of interstate commerce."

This was held important because it was believed here that the keynoter consulted President Roosevelt on the Constitutional aspects of his address. It was taken as an indication that even though the Democratic platform does not call for a Constitutional change along this line, it will be the objective of President Roosevelt if he is reelected.

Plank to Widen 'Merit' System Appears Likely

Philadelphia, June 23.—Prospects of a Federal employes' "merit" plank in the Democratic platform, as strong as the Republican platform declaration, but lacking the force of Gov. Alf Landon's civil service declaration, appeared bright tonight.

Word was passed around campaign headquarters that such a plank already has been included in the tentative draft.

Pleas for a strong civil service stand will be placed before the resolutions committee tomorrow by Luther C. Steward, president of the National Federation of Federal Employes; William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor and by spokesmen for the League of Women Voters and the Democratic women's committee for suggestions on the Democratic platform.

Steward, who speaks for 67,000 Federal employes in all branhes of the service except the postoffice, said he will urge indorsement of the merit system as an essential of good government. Steward, who made the same argument in Cleveland, will urge that a strong civil service system provides the best insurance against failure of agencies and establishments due to the incompetence of untrained personnel. He will ask extension of the merit system to all Federal positions which are not directly of a policy-making nature.

Gov. Landon went even further than this in his message to the Republican convention, after the resolutions committee had turned down his civil service suggestions. He asked extension of the merit system to all Federal officials virtually up to cabinet rank and to the entire postoffice system.

Lewis Is Silent On Threat Report

New York, June 23 (AP).—John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers of America, declined to comment today on a report that his dissatisfaction with failure of Congress to pass the revised Guffey coal bill had threatened to end his support of President Roosevelt.

The New York Sun, in a dispatch from Philadelphia, said that trouble had been narrowly averted as the result of yesterday's conference between Lewis and the President in Washington.

Lewis said his statement after the conference, in which he pledged anew the support of himself and the membership of his union to the Administration explained his position and would not be amplied.

Flier, With 3 Children in Arms, Leaps to Death Off Ship at Sea

An early morning tragedy in which an ace army flier leaped to death with his three children from the transport Chateau-Thierry en route to New York, was revealed yesterday by the War Department.

The officer, 35-year-old Lieut. Lindsay M. Bawsel was on his way from his post in the Canal Zone to Walter Reed General Hospital here for observation.

Between 3 and 4 a. m. Monday, as the transport was steaming off the coast of Florida, Bawsel, with his three children, 5, 3 and 2 years old, in his arms, leaped overboard.

The transport was stopped and boats were lowered for search but none of the bodies was recovered.

Mrs. Bawsel was on board the ship, which is expected to dock Friday.

Bawsel earned his rating as an Army airplane pilot in October, 1928, after he had been graduated from the Primary Flying School at San Antonio, Tex., and the Advanced Flying School at Kelly Field, Tex. The following year he passed his examination for commission as a second lieutenant and was assigned to duty at Maxwell Field, Ala.

He then took a course in communications at the Air Corps Technical School at Rantoul, Ill. Following his graduation he was assigned to Mitchell Field, Long Island as assistant post signal officer, and in September, 1934, was ordered to Panama.

In March, 1935, while serving as intelligence and communications officer of the Nineteenth Composite Wing at Albrook Field, Canal Zone, he was promoted to the temporary rank of captain. He reverted to his permanent rank of first lieutenant last week.

Twice in his flying career Lieut. Bawsel was forced to bail out—making him a second degree member of the mythical Caterpillar Club. His first parachute jump was at Chanute Field in November, 1929, when his plane went into an outside spin and he was unable to come out of it. The second jump was made last September when a passenger in a Douglas amphibian plane whose motor failed, he was ordered by the pilot to jump.

Marler Named Canadian Envoy To United States

Sir Herbert Marler, Canadian Minister to Japan, will be the new Minister to the United States from the Dominion, it was announced yesterday in the House of Commons at Ottawa by Prime Minister W. L. Mackenzie King.

Sir Herbert has been stationed in Tokyo since 1929, being the first minister to represent Canada in the Orient.

He succeeds Maj. William Duncan Herridge, who resigned his post when the Conservative government, headed by his brother-in-law, Richard B. Bennett, was swept out of power last October. Canada has been without a minister here since.

Sir Herbert is well known for his knowledge of financial, tariff and railway matters. For his work as a member of the House of Commons in obtaining the trade agreement between Canada and the British West Indies in 1925, he was appointed that year privy councilor of Canada in the cabinet of Mackenzie King.

He was named two years later national treasurer and chairman of the finance committe for the diamond jubilee of federation. In 1929 he was selected for the Tokyo post.

Sir Herbert was born 60 years ago in Canada. He was educated at McGill University and spent the next few years practicing law in Montreal. He was a member of the council of education for the Province of Quebec for many years and during the war served as fuel administrator.

He married in 1902 and has two sons and a daughter.

Democrats So Tired Cheering, 'Late Show' Proves a Fizzle

By Sidney Olson.
A Staff Correspondent.

Philadelphia, June 23.—The Democrats tonight blew themselves out in the first hour of their first night meeting.

Armed with every variety of horn, whistle and noisemaker that human brains have devised, they tooted so loudly and so heartily, and paraded so vigorously that they were worn out by 11 o'clock.

As a matter of fact, so loud were their cheers during Senator Alben W. Barkley's keynote speech that, at its conclusion, they were unable to stage the "late show" they had planned.

The convention was called for 8 o'clock. Everybody was in his seat (12,500 strong) by 9 o'clock. At 9:05 p. m., Farley gaveled for order and by 10 o'clock there had been seven demonstrations, the last one enduring for 27 minutes.

It was all the fault of Gov. George H. Earle, of Pennsylvania. The Governor, a handsome fair young man who carries 230 pounds easily on his 6-foot-2-inch frame, merely reminded the convention that he and his father and ancestors before him had been Republicans. And he went on in his clear, emphatic browl to tell how and why he had left his class—the wealthy Pennsylvanians—and his party to become a New Dealer.

Senator Joseph Guffey of Pennsylvania grabbed a little purple tin horn and started down the aisle tooting. The hall went wild. They had laughed, applauded and cheered the gag-studded speech of the Governor throughout. They had demonstrated in standing ovations six times. But when he reached the sentence predicting a Democratic victory in Pennsylvania in November they were off in a very large way.

Down below the platform hidden from the curious eye, the pipe-organist, a slim, perspiring fellow, began stroking his triple-decked keyboard, drowning the two loudest bands you ever heard in one hall and the cheers and miscellaneous noises of the 12,500 assembled spectators in a rolling surge of music ginning of his address which was in his advance copy and which was interpreted as a slap at the Supreme Court. It was to the effect that the Democratic convention had convened with all branches of the Federal Government functioning in the fullness of national responsibility, save one.

Barkley Scoffs At Republicans '12 Long Years'

There may be no significance in this omission, for the Democratic keynoter had an unusually long speech prepared and he dropped one-third of it in delivery. He omitted some of the sharpest phrases in his text attacking the Republicans.

But he retained an assault on the platform adopted by the Republicans at Cleveland. To call the Republican document "a platform is flattery indeed,' he asserted, adding that "it is a revolving eye that looks in all directions and sees nothing."

Fish on Rostrum.

Incidentally, at this point in the keynote address, Representative Hamilton Fish, ardent supporter of Senator William E. Borah's candidacy for the Republican Presidential nomination, crossed the front of the hall and took a seat in the reserved boxes behind the speaker's rostrum.

He left before Senator Barkley concluded and the significance of his visit could not be learned from him. It caused widespread speculation, however, among those Democrats who are hopeful that the Lion of Idaho may bolt the Republicans this year.

Senator Barkley's speech suffered from being too lengthy. In dropping parts of it he destroyed to some extent the continuity in which it was written. Nevertheless, the delegates seemed to enjoy it and cheered lustily at every eulogy of the New Deal and attack on the Republicans.

Delivered in a booming voice, the speech frequently brought the convention to its feet in greater enthusiasm than was displayed by the Republicans on the occasion of Senator Frederick Steiwer's keynote at Cleveland—and technical defects in the loud-speaking system which plagued the Republican keynoter were absent here.

In fact, the Democrats, as usual, were more vocal and more demonstrative than the Republicans. They loosened their vocal chords at the brief opening session this morning, addressed by National Committee Chairman James A. Farley, and they had another warming-up session tonight when Gov. George H. Earle of Pennsylvania preceded the keynoter on the rostrum.

Farley Praises Earle.

Before Senator Barkley took the rostrum, Chairman Farley introduced Gov. George H. Earle of Pennsylvania as a "great Democratic Governor of a great Democratic State." The delegates gave Gov. Earle a noisy demonstration, with the Pennsylvanians in the galleries joining in the applause.

This demonstration revealed that the delegates had come armed with horns, clackers, whistles and every other noise-making devise that could be carried into the hall—it was a taste of what was to come later in the evening. As noise-makers and demonstrators, the Democrats have scored already over the Republicans.

When the demonstration subsided after some ten minutes, the organ and convention band lending a hand in keeping the cheering going, Gov. Earle greeted the delegates in the name of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania.

He said it was fitting that Democrats should come here "to rededicate the party of Thomas Jefferson to those principles of liberty and equality immortalized in the Declaration of Independence. "He received a splattering of applause when he named Justice Harlan Stone of the Supreme Court as "that great liberal." Twice Justice Stone, a Republican, has been named here so far and twice he has been applauded because of his support of New Deal measures.

Governor Earle, with all the ardor usually displayed by converts to any cause, assailed the reactionaries and the Liberty Leaguers, contending that "the worst enemies of capitalism are its so-called capitalists." He asserted that "they entirely ignore the thunder on the left, which now makes itself heard in the third party movement of Lemke, Coughlin and Townsend."

A moment later Gov. Earle revealed he was actually a convert to Democracy, explaining that until four years ago he was a Republican, as his ancestors had been, but that he "left the Republican Party because it no longer represented the principles and ideals of its founder, the immortal Abraham Lincoln."

This brought a mighty shout from the delegates which sent the applause thermometer up to 100 decibels for one brief moment—the highest peak yet recorded by that instrument either here or at the Cleveland convention.

Again he was cheered when he said that neither he nor millions of liberal Republicans who have left the party of their fathers would return to the "party of Herbert Hoover until it has cast off its evil associations and become once more the party of Lincoln."

Taking up the slogan of "Three long years," which Senator Frederick Steiwer gave to the Republicans, Gov. Earle recited in a series of phrases conditions of "three long years ago." Then, he interpolated into his speech, to bring another cheer, "three long years ago came Roosevelt."

Pennsylvania's chief executive contended that "the Democratic Party is our Nation's main bulwark today against the advancing armies of big business fascism." He added that the Democratic Party "must take the lead in the battle of the great masses of our population against the forces of greed and privilege."

He continued along this line, arguing that Democrats were not fighting Republicans but "the powerful, privileged interests which have seized control of the Republican Party machinery, those interests which are exploiting the Republican citizens of this Nation just as they are planning to exploit the Government of all citizens."

This scion of a wealthy Pennsylvania family finally brought his address to a conclusion with a promise that "on November next we will give the candidates selected by this convention the electoral vote of that erstwhile rock-ribbed Republican stronghold, the great Democratic Commonwealth of Pennsylvania."

The Pennsylvania delegation, led by Senator Joseph F. Guffey, leaped to its feet cheering. A red-coated band rushed up the aisle and the first genuine floor demonstration was under way, with a dozen other State delegations joining in. It was a reception for the "home town boy," as well as a preliminary warm-up for the keynoter.

There were ten minutes to be consumed before the scheduled hour for the Barkley address, so Chairman Farley let the demonstration go on. Finally Chairman Farley brought silence and after routine announcements, presented Mrs. J. Borden Harriman, of Washington, "official hostess" of the convention.

She reminded delegates and alternates that all parties in their honor were open to them irrespective of whether they had received invitations. W. Forbes Morgan, national committee secretary, then read the call for the convention.

Lehman Is Escort.

Senator Barkley was elected temporary chairman, along with the other temporary officers of the convention. The Kentuckian, to the tune of Dixie, was escorted to the rostrum by Gov. Herbert H. Lehman, of New York; Gov. A. B. Chandler, of Kentucky; Senator Alva B. Adams, of Colorado; Mrs. James MacDonald, of Michigan, and Mrs. Eleanor D. McFadden, of California.

All these preliminaries consumed more than 20 minutes, delaying the start of the keynote address by that long, much to the chagrin of the radio managers, with their waiting networks. Senator Barkley interpolated at the beginning of his adress a promise to dispatch the business of the convention speedily—something which so far had not been done.

Almost at the beginning of his address Senator Barkley omitted a paragraph which contained a phrase interpreted by those with advance copies of the address as an indirect attack on the Supreme Court. This phrase read as follows:

"We meet in the fullness of national responsibility in all branches of the Government save one."

In an apparent effort to shorten his unusually long speech, Senator Barkley frequently dropped lines and paragraphs as he went along. Thus he did not mention Franklin D. Roosevelt by name at the outset of his speech—an omission which undoubtedly killed off a demonstration.

He likewise dropped two paragraphs which undertook to minimize the significance of Thomas Jefferson's declaration that "that government is best which governs least."

Assails "12 Years."

Senator Barkley thus quickly got down to the meat of his address, first launching an attack on the 12 years of Republican rule which preceded the New Deal. He claimed it was necessary for him to point to these ancient wounds because "in order to assess the wisdom of the remedies we have administered the ailments from which we suffered" should be diagnosed.

Thus, he said, "for 12 years—yea, 12 'long' years—the ancient doctrinaires of special privilege had stood at the pilot's wheel on our ship of state." The delegates cheered his appropriation of the Steiwer phrase, "long years."

He maintained that when the Roosevelt Administration assumed office "all classes of society bore the marks of such a combination of maladies that it is only possible to mention them in the vaguest outline."

These, he added, were "maladies which took root deeply in the whole body of our industrial, social and economic fabric and were therefore chronic."

First, he assailed the Republican tariff policy, contending that "in four years—yea, four 'long' years—under the guidance of the man who was applauded but not renominated at Cleveland, we saw our trade with the world decline from $10,000,000,000 to $3,000,000,000 per year."

Criticizes Landon.

He took a slap at Gov. Alf M. Landon, asserting that he had denounced the Federal Deposit Insurance Act and as Governor of Kansas had "exerted every ounce of influence at his command to prevent the banks of Kansas from joining that great security act passed by the Roosevelt Administration."

He received loud applause when he shouted a demand to know whether the Republican candidate and his supporters proposed to indorse these Roosevelt banking laws or undertake to repeal them, if successful. And again he was cheered when he asserted that whereas 7,000 banks had closed their doors under the Hoover regime, only 264 had failed since March 16, 1933—only eight of which were national banks.

The keynoter shouted that so far this year "not a single national bank in the United States has closed its doors." The delegates cheered and the band struck up a few bars from "It Ain't Gonna Rain No More."

Turning to the New Deal's efforts in the field of foreign trade, Senator Barkley drew applause when he eulogized the efforts of Secretary of State Cordell Hull, "to pry ajar the gates of foreign trade and start again the movement of international commerce and good will."

Senator Barkley in his prepared address quoted at length from Republican declarations of previous years promising to restore the farmer to a level of equality with industry.

But these he omitted in delivering the speech, making the point, however, that Republicans in the past had regarded the farm problem as a national one and that in 1932 both parties had advocated control of production. He omitted also criticism that in light of "past Republican fulminations in behalf of controlled agricultural production, their present devotion to uncontrolled abundance seems cheap and hollow."

Politics and People

Name of 'Roosevelt' Brings Delegates From Seats; President Dominates Party.

By Franklyn Waltman

PHILADELPHIA, June 23.—The only spontaneous, lusty yell in the opening session of the Democratic National Convention at noon today came when National Committee Chairman James A. Farley pronounced for the first time the name, "Franklin D. Roosevelt."

WALTMAN.

Several minutes before genial Jim pulled the delegates out of their seats yelling—and the band kept them yelling for a minute or two—when he declared "continuance of the New Deal is the issue." But that demonstration, the first in the convention, had a forced, false note about it. It is doubtful whether 95 per cent of the delegates really knew the significance of that declaration—indeed Jim Farley might not know it, since his speeches are prepared by the able and apparently indefatigable Charles Michelson.

But the enthusiastic reception of his first mention of "Franklin D. Roosevelt" was genuine. It was greeted with a great piercing yell which sent the sound recorder up to 60 decibels, or sound units—the highest figure recorded during the day session. And the delegates kept yelling until the band took up "Happy Days Are Here Again" and then they shouted some more.

That yell and the ensuing demonstration epitomizes this convention. It illustrated perfectly that President Roosevelt dominates this convention to a greater degree than one man has ever dominated a national political conclave. Not only is he the standard bearer and leader of the party but he is accepted as it's dictator.

Whatever Mr. Roosevelt wants he will get from this convention, whether it be abrogation of the two-thirds rule, or a platform plank advocating a constitutional amendment, or a plank silent on that subject. The majority seem concerned only to learn what the President wants.

Southern delegates, under instruction from State conventions to oppose abrogation of the two-thirds rule, privately confide they will not fight that battle. Old line conservative Democrats, who believe the party is treading treacherous monetary paths, shrug their shoulders and assert "What is the use to make a fight?"

Indeed, there are enough conservative Democrats in the convention to make a hard and presentable fight in behalf of a return to the traditional policies of their party—but they will not fight. They excuse their surrender on the ground that such an effort would be futile—like "butting your head against the wall," as one put it—so well have Jim Farley and the New Dealers organized the convention.

The convention resolutions committee personnel indicates the trend here. Not more than 5 or 6 of the 55 members ever served on that committee before. For the first time in many years Virginia is represented by another than Senator Carter Glass. Senator Millard E. Tydings, of Maryland, shunned appointment to the committee, gallantly waving his junior colleague, Senator George L. Radcliffe, to the place. Senator William Gibbs McAdoo preferred to sit on the convention floor than help frame the platform.

These men cannot square all that has been done in the name of the New Deal with their convictions. But they feel that it would be futile to try to buck the sentiment to let the President have his way and they do not wish responsibility for anything over which they cannot exert some influence. So they are letting the fight go by default.

This sentiment to let the President have whatever he wishes is due in part to admiration and respect for Mr. Roosevelt. But only in minor part. The real reason why the President holds this convention in the palm of his hand is the power of patronage.

To a greater degree than in any Democratic convention this meeting is one of Federal jobholders. Everywhere one looks on the convention floor are seen Cabinet officers, Assistant Secretaries of departments, collectors of internal revenue, collectors of customs, immigration commissioners and AAA, WPA and other alphabetical supervisors and employes.

These delegates, along with the Democratic Senators and Representatives and the local party bosses through whom Federal patronage is dispensed, are all beholden to Mr. Roosevelt. They do his bidding because their jobs or their political prestige and strength is at stake and they are for him, heart and soul, for he represents their meal ticket. With few exceptions, they do not particularly care about political philosophies. They are politicians in the machine sense.

These facts are not reported in any spirit of criticism but as an explanation of why this convention is so subservient to the wishes of President Roosevelt. In the past, Republican conventions have been packed with Federal jobholders. Now the shoe is on the Democratic foot and it is silly and sophomoric to engage in eulogies about such gatherings being inspired by high principles. Few men in any political convention have the courage of their convictions. They faithfully and vociferiously follow whatever successfully leads their party, even though the leader of today is the antithesis of the leader of yesteryear. That is the American system, like it or not.

If evidence of this were needed it could be found in the hundreds of men in this convention who fought heatedly under Al Smith's banner in 1928 but today damn his name. But more easily it could be found in Senator Alben W. Barkley's keynote speech tonight.

Four years ago Senator Barkley delivered a keynote address in which he beat his breast over the spending of the Hoover Administration and the unbalanced budget. He assailed Mr. Hoover for creating "an intolerable situation" and piling on the backs of the American people an "intolerable and unbearable load which weighs them down until they can scarcely look the sun in the face."

And yet, tonight unblushingly, Senator Barkley undertook to defend Government spending by President Roosevelt, which has reached unprecedented proportions and which makes the Hoover Administration look like a regime of Coolidge economy.

Glass to Leave Parley Today; Bolt Is Denied

Philadelphia, June 23.—Senator Carter Glass, of Virginia, outstanding Senate banking authority and sound-money advocate, plans to leave Philadelphia and the Democratic National Convention tomorrow, but close friends insisted that in no sense is he "taking a walk."

Senator Glass, whose support of a currency based on gold is out of line with current New Deal money policy, and with the tentative money plank brought here by Senator Robert F. Wagner, of New York, previously had expressed his unwillingness to serve on the resolutions committee because of his health.

Today the Virginia delegation named Gov. George C. Peery to represent the State on the platform-drafting body, taking cognizance, it was said, of the Senator's wishes in the matter. Reports had been printed that Glass would have served it "drafted," but this he denied tonight emphatically.

He denied with equal vigor reports that he planned to "bolt" the Democratic Party. These had gained currency after the Senator declined to serve on the resolutions committee and was reported to have left the convention today before Chairman James A. Farley, of the Democratic National Committee, had finished speaking.

Glass later told newspapermen that he thought Farley had concluded his speech, and would have stayed until the end had he known otherwise.

Friends of the Virginian, who has been far from sympathetic with some of the New Deal policies, said that instead of "bolting" his party, he plans to stanchly support Roosevelt throughout the campaign. Some of his associates, it was said, have advised him to give first consideration to his health, pointing out that a strenuous money fight by the Senator would accomplish little in view of the prevailing sentiment here.

Curley Is Open to Bid For Vice Presidency

Boston, June 23 (AP).—Governor James M. Curley said, in an interview today, he would accept the Democratic nomination for Vice President if it is offered him. Curley is now a candidate for United States Senator.

Curley made his statement in commenting upon a published report that some delegates from the West would favor the Massachusetts Governor for second place when the Democratic National convention ballots.

"I know nothing about it," he said. "I do know, however, that there are about 12 Curley-for-President-in-1940 clubs functioning on the Pacific Coast. They were organized after I toured the West for President Roosevelt in 1932."

Hooker Named Again to Head Va. Delegation

Beverly to Be Secretary of State Bloc Holding 22 Ballots.

By the Associated Press.

Philadelphia, June 23. — Gov. George C. Peery today succeeded Senator Carter Glass as the Virginia representative on the 1936 Democratic national platform committee.

Glass' name, at his own request, was not presented to the Virginia delegation's initial caucus today. Peery was placed in nomination by Senator Harry F. Byrd, the Virginia national committeeman. The Governor's election was unanimous.

The veteran Glass, who last night said he was "too worn out by Congressional duties" to do any work at this convention, sat silently with his secretary in the caucus as his 40 years of continual service as a national platform builder terminated.

Views Similar to Glass.

It generally was conceded Gov. Peery as a member of the committee would hold resolutions views similar to those of Senator Glass.

J. Murray Hooker was reelected unanimously as chairman of the Virginia delegation of 54 members with 22 votes in the convention.

W. W. Beverly, Richmond, was named secretary of the delegation.

The caucus went on record as "vigorously" opposing any proposed abrogation of the two-thirds vote rule for nominating.

State Senator Aubrey Weaver, named as the Virginia rules committeeman, said he woud "go to any length" to carry out the caucus instructions.

Regrets Expressed.

Various delegates asserted their "regret" that Glass was "too worn out from Congressional duties" to take again his place on the platform committee which he has held since 1896.

Gov. Peery said: "My position on the committee will reflect what I believe to be the will of Virginia Democrats."

When the election was over Glass said he had no comment except to say that he came here against admonitions from his physician and did "not intend to do any convention work."

Assistant Secretary of State R. Walton Moore, Fairfax, was named as the Virginia permanent organization committeeman, and State Senator Robert W. Daniel, Brandon, was named to the credentials committee.

Among the "unofficial delegates" from Virginia at the National Democratic Convention here are:

Col. Dan Porter, of Orange, former member of the House of Delegates, who was proud of his assistant sergeant-at-arms position; State Senator Charles J. Harkrader, Bristol publisher, who was in the press section; P. E. Estron, Bristol City Democratic chairman; Bolling Handy, Richmond, former industrial commissioner, and Mrs. Blair Bannister, Lynchburg, sister of Senator Carter Glass, and an officer of the Mint.

Hamilton Fish Drops in on Rally

By the United Press.

Philadelphia, June 23.—Representative Hamilton Fish, of New York, a Republican, walked across the center of the hall of the Democratic convention tonight. Democratic eyes popped.

"What are you doing here?" somebody yelled. Fish laughed, waved his hand and went on seeking a seat.

He finally was cornered on the platform and was compelled to explain why he wandered into a Democratic convention after spending a week in Cleveland denouncing the New Deal.

"I just stopped off on my way back from Chicago, where I spoke Monday."

Fish comes from Hyde Park, N. Y., and among his constituents is President Roosevelt.

"I also am here in my capacity as the Representative from the President's home district," Fish said. "I am his constituent or he is mine—we haven't decided that yet."

Women Write Own Platform At Philadelphia

14 Leaders Map Program Ranging From Peace to Child Labor.

By the Associated Press.

Philadelphia, June 23.—Fourteen leading Democratic women today discussed platform subjects which might be missed by Democratic men and turned out an eight-plank party declaration.

It declared how feminine New Dealers feel on peace, child labor, consumers, civil service, housing, education and individual liberty.

Representative Caroline O'Day of New York, chairman of this advisory committee, and Miss Mary Dewson, head of Roosevelt feminine forces, who will present the women's platform to the resolutions committee, each claimed a pet plank.

Mrs. O'Day's was peace. Miss Dewson's was the preamble, which read:

"During the past three years women have widened their interest from isolated individual laws to broader social and economic trends and are looking at America as a whole. They have come to realize that human welfare is inseparably integrated with economic conditions.

"Possessed of a broader social outlook, aware of the responsibility of the Federal Government—women commend this administration for taking the lead in solving these modern human problems. Such leadership, such government commands the respect and confidence of women and offers a challenge and a future opportunity to those whose zeal for service is strong."

Miss Dewson said that she and Mrs. O'Day had unofficially shown the platform to Senator Robert Wagner, of New York, chairman of the platform committee, and he had complimented it as "extremely well-drawn."

"Did he seem to think it would get into the party platform?" she was asked.

"Oh, well now," was her reply. "The committee will have to decide that. Even if Senator Wagner said 'aye, aye' it wouldn't mean anything. You have been watching us Democrats—we don't walk along like a herd."

The peace plank complimented Rooseveltian reciprocal trade agreements, neutrality legislation, asked stronger neutrality legislation, "a defense policy based on defense of our soil from invasion and not of our interests abroad," and taking profits out of war.

The women specifically called for ratification of the child labor amendment.

"We advocate the extension and strengthening of the civil service" was all they said on that subject, main objective of the League of Women Voters.

On slum clearance it said: "We believe the necessity for slum clearance to conserve the health and morals of citizens to be so urgent that we recommend the appropriate legislation required to provide a Federal housing program."

Roosevelt Hears Farley Over Radio

The proceedings of the Democratic National Convention echoed in the White House yesterday as President Roosevelt paused in his work schedule to listen in on the broadcast.

After listening to National Chairman James A. Farley's speech, the Chief Executive held a two-hour conference with his old friend and New York neighbor, Judge John E. Mack, who, as he did in 1932, will place Mr. Roosevelt's name in nomination at Philadelphia.

Prior to his talk with Mack, Mr. Roosevelt began writing his speech of acceptance, which he will deliver in person to the convention Saturday night.

He went over the political situation with Speaker Bankhead, Chairman McReynolds (Democrat), of the House Foreign Affairs Committee; Hugh R. Wilson, the American Minister at Geneva; Jesse H. Jones, chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and Senator Hayden, of Arizona.

Platform

ance, in answer to the Republican demand for repeal of the FDIC.

Relief—Defense of Federal relief as an emergency medium, but probably with recognition that relief eventually must be adjusted on a State grant basis.

Foreign—No stand against League or World Court entry, but possibly a statement on "non-involvement" in European complications, hedged by some offer of co-operation with nations abroad.

Housing—A housing plank framed by Senator Wagner, "father of housing legislation," probably stressing the necessity for slum clearance to conserve the health and morals of citizens.

Civil Service—Aid pledged to the merit system, and a strengthened and extended Civil Service system, but not to the extent urged by Gov. Alf M. Landon in his message to the Republican convention.

Even More to the Left.

In general, tonight's keystone speech of Senator Alben Barkley is supposed to strike the "liberal" theme of the platform, and both are believed to have been swung more to the left by Al Smith's assault on the New Deal. The platform as a campaign paper, however, will be more of a defense of what the New Deal has done, than what it will do.

After last-minute conferences with the President, Senator Wagner arrived in Philadelphia at 4 a. m. today, passed the night at the Barkley Hotel and throughout the morning conferred with a long list of friends and officials, including Secretary Wallace, Gov. Lehman of New York, and Representative Caroline O'Day, of New York.

His conference with Gov. Lehman was considered significant in view of Lehman's known wishes to incorporate a wages and hours plank in the platform, even to the extent of a constitutional amendment, "if necessary." Lehman, whose New York State minimum wage law was struck down by the Supreme Court, is said to have been assured that the wages and hours plank will be strong enough to satisfy him.

The resolutions committee named tonight was considered sufficiently New Deal in sympathies to approve all that the President may desire. The list includes 16 Senators and one Cabinet officer, Secretary of Commerce Daniel C. Roper.

The Virginia delegation sent Gov. George C. Peery to the resolutions committee instead of Senator Carter Glass, who had expressed an unwillingness to serve due to impairment of his health in the strain of the recent Congressional session.

Glass said he had not talked with Wagner, but that Gov. Peery "is pretty much in harmony with my views."

Friends of the Virginian pointed out that even had he served on the resolutions committee, his usual forceful influence in Congressional money action would be hopelessly outvoted by a group determined to follow through all New Deal policies.

Probabilities are that Senator Elmer Thomas, Oklahoma dollar devaluationist, will be more satisfied with the party's money plank than is Senator Glass.

The ony pitched warfare that the platform has evoked to date has to do with the farm plank. It was in this connection that Secretary Wallace talked with Wagner today. Wallace wants to lengthen and strengthen the very general farm proposals in the tentative drafts, and wants declarations for crop insurance and some recognition of crop control and his ever normal granary plan.

The President is said to be committed to short planks and a platform of about 2,000 words, and to oppose making a detailed exception of the farm plank. Wallace and some Midwestern delegates are putting up a strong fight for specific farm remedies and some concessions may be made.

Edward A. O'Neal, of the American Farm Bureau Federation, will lay practically the same farm plank before the Democratic resolutions committee tomorrow that he carried to the Republicans in Cleveland. It calls for production control, farmer-owned co-operatives, commodity loans and extension of the soil conservation policy.

Wagner's conversations with Mrs. O'Day today had to do with recommendations of the Democratic women's committee for suggestions on the Democratic platform. Wagner looked over their platform proposals. Mrs. O'Day said Wagner told her many similar suggestions are included in the tentative draft of the platform.

The women's committee suggestions included a peace plank advocating stronger neutrality legislation, a defense policy based upon "defense of our soil from invasion" and laws to "tax the profits out of war." Their other planks called for a child labor amendment and legislation, repeal of laws discriminatory against women, and housing, consumers, civil service, education and "free speech" planks.

It was learned tonight that Senator Maloney, of Connecticut, had joined others in asking Senator Wagner to incorporate in the preliminary platform draft a clause calling for a constitutional amendment "if necessary" to assure a state of Federal enforcement of wages and hours legislation.

The National Woman's Party is opposing such an amendment unless it mentions specifically men, as well as women, wage earners. President William Green, of the American Federation of Labor, who will appear before the resolutions committee tomorrow, favors wages and hour regulation only for women.

1872 Ballot Virtually Clinches 1873 Bottle Wine for D.C. Man

Richard F. Bickerton, spry at 85, probably will win a bottle of 1873 wine for voting his first and last time as a Democrat in the District.

The Roosevelt nominators have announced a reward of the bottle of wine and a ride in the torchlight parade Saturday for the oldest Democrat voter located in the District.

Yesterday Bickerton saw the ad in a paper and announced his candidacy for the bottle. So far he is the only candidate and seems to have the bottle clinched.

Slightly built and gray haired, Bickerton doesn't look much more than 70. He was born on July 30, 1851 on H street between Ninth and Tenth streets northwest. He lives with his son, Frank L. Bickerton, 100 Fourth street southeast.

In 1872, when 21 years old, Bickerton voted the Democratic ticket in the District. It was his first and last chance to vote, for the next year Washington was denied its right of suffrage.

At that time, Bickerton explained, the District had a territorial form of government, with a House of Delegates of 22 elected members. District residents also elected a member to the House of Representatives.

Confident that he will reach the century mark, Bickerton wants to vote again as a resident of the District. "One of my deepest convictions," he said, "is that no community in the United States should pay taxes without representation."

Bickerton admitted he was not "very favorable" toward the New Deal and does not favor Roosevelt, but insisted he could use the bottle of wine.

"I don't drink whiskey," he said, "and I have never been seriously ill in my life, but I'd be glad to get that bottle of wine."

The veteran vote caster said he was not sure about riding in the parade.

Battle Waged To Halt Repeal Of 2-Third Rule

Philadelphia, June 23.—A fight to prevent abrogation of the traditional two-thirds nominating rule was waged tonight by a scattering of Southern delegations, after New York and Pennsylvania delegates earlier had voted overwhelmingly for repeal of the rule.

It generally was conceded that broken Southern opposition to abrogation, even with some Western protests thrown in, could not muster the majority vote necessary to keep the rule on the convention books.

The Virginia delegation today unanimously decided to fight to the last for preservation of the rule. The Alabama, Tennessee, Georgia, South Carolina, Texas and Mississippi delegations, it developed, also will oppose abrogation. The Alabama vote was 16 to 6 against repeal, but under the unit rule, Alabama's full quota of 22 votes will be cast against it.

Charges were spread that President Roosevelt would seek to break another tradition by running for a third term, and for this reason is demanding that the 104-year rule be thrown overboard. These, however, failed to check the drive to put an end to the two-thirds nominating requirement. Democratic chieftains laughed at the charge.

Regardless of the President's views toward a third term, however, it was apparent to all that repeal of the two-thirds rule, with the unit rule continued in force in many States, would give the present Democratic leadership virtually the power to name the next nominee.

Senator Bennett Champ Clark, of Missouri, who is leading the fight for abrogation, will hold an organization meeting of his rules committee tomorrow.

Hazen Will Lead Roosevelt Parade

Representatives of every State in the Union, preceded by Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen and 20 mounted aids, will lead the torchlight parade of the Roosevelt Nominators to Griffith Stadium Saturday night.

Plans for the celebration were completed yesterday by Joseph E. Davies, chairman. They include the parade, an entertainment of vaudeville, athletics and outdoor stunts with fireworks, and President Roosevelt's acceptance speech.

The torchlight marchers, replete with State flags and bands, will be divided into Congressional districts and counties. They will line up, ten abreast, at Constitution avenue and Tenth street and parade to the Veterans' Administration, where those not in costume will be allowed to hop street cars. The rest will have to go on foot.

Among the bands which have signified their intention of parading are the Arlington County, Holy Comforter, Firemen's, Police Boys Club, Allied Democratic Clubs, Morning Star Lodge Elks and the National Training School.

Bus Rerouting Hearing Date Is Set by P. U. C.

The Public Utilities Commission announced yesterday that it will hold a formal public hearing at 10 a. m., July 8, in Room 104, District Building, to consider a petition of People's Counsel William A. Roberts for a bus re-routing on Monroe street.

Barkley Pays Tribute to New Deal in Democratic Convention Keynote

Senator Compares Roosevelt With Great Past Presidents

Philadelphia, June 23.—The text of the keynote speech of Senator Barkley, of Kentucky, before the Democratic National Convention follows:

Ladies and Gentlemen of the convention:

We have assembled, as we have done for more than a century, to justify in government a liberalism designed to promote those primal and inalienable rights which outweigh all political formalism and all conceptions of special privilege.

We are assembled here not merely to defend but to proclaim the New Deal, as the surest highway to that "life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness," to which Thomas Jefferson devoted his life and Franklin D. Roosevelt is consecrating every fiber of his immortal spirit.

We meet in the fullness of national responsibility in all branches of the Government save one, and with a record of performance never equaled in the history of the Republic; and on that record we stand before the American people without apology and without retreat.

Modern Life Complex.

We meet to rename, and subsequently to re-elect, to the highest office within our gift a man whose build-up is his record.

As we survey the picture which the world presents and contemplate the four tragic years just prior to 1933, and the slow but steady progress of our country under this Democratic administration, we are moved by a sense of profound gratitude that the Nation today looks into the future with eyes that see within reach the goal of a happier and more abundant life for all our people.

We come to this convention in the name of a democracy which is national in its historic background, in its approach to and willingness to deal in a national way with problems that are national in their scope.

We recognize the complexity of modern life. We covet no power that would deprive the States of the right to deal locally with local responsibilities. These are adequate to consume the energies of all who are willing to devote themselves to their solution.

But we recognize the undeniable and self-evident fact that because of our growth in territory, population, wealth, the means of production, distribution and consumption and the facilities of transportation and communication which have knitted the American people into a nation, certain great vital questions affecting the daily lives of the people as a whole have been projected into our economic and social structure.

These vital questions cannot be stubbornly avoided or their solution long delayed by any political party or any administration which has an adequate sense of its responsibility to the people.

Political organizations are neither created nor justified merely as means of obtaining public office. Their justification lies alone in affording a means of expression and desire, as well as a focus of responsibility, in the administration of public affairs.

Thomas Jefferson is often misrepresented by those who pay to him the dubious homage of the lip as having said "that government is best which governs least."

From all the volumes which Jefferson wrote it is indeed unfair to lift and emphasize a single sentence, uttered concerning an ideal state of human perfection never yet attained. If that sentence must be taken without context or reservation, it is but a step to the doctrine that "that government is best which governs not at all."

In this age of infinite complexity, of mutual dependence of community on community, state on state and nation on nation, all responsible governments must enlarge their field of activity and supervision to the end that the weak may be protected from the strong and rapacious and the approximation of justice among all classes may be secured.

Cites Responsibilities.

Any political group, therefore, who, in the midst of tragic impotence among the people to adjust unaided their lives and fortunes, and carve their individual paths through the impenetrable forests of economic density, hides behind the sedentary indolence of some ancient shibboleth, is unfit for high station or responsibility in the society of our day.

Jefferson Foremost, Hence Despised Liberal, and Jackson Was 'Ruffian'

This is a moving, changing world in which we live. New generations, viewing the discarded shell of ancient theories, and impatient with the fatal doctrine of defeatism, are asking why, among all the arts and sciences and achievements of man, only government is a laggard. And make no mistake about it, they are searching for the answer.

It was this impatience with the blighting atmosphere of the political and social antiquarian that made Jefferson the foremost, as well as the most despised liberal of his generation; that drove Andrew Jackson along a course for which he was denounced as a vulgar ruffian; that inspired Abraham Lincoln toward a goal for which he was described as the earthly incarnation of coarse buffoonery; and that Woodrow Wilson was cynically pictured as a dreamy professor bent on political and social experimentation.

Franklin Roosevelt finds himself in glorious companionship with these great spirits who spurned the chariot of futility and negation.

He has not dallied with defeat nor taken counsel with cowardice lest his feet be found on untraveled ground. He has sought to dedicate the powers of this Government to the service of the people who support it with their substance and their blood. He has restored to them faith in it and control over it.

Why was it essential that the powers of government be exerted in a new way on the daily life of the American people? Why is it impossible to tread the same old paths, no matter where they led? Why had there been a complete breakdown in nearly every branch of public and private endeavor?

Because for twelve years—yea, twelve "long" years—the ancient doctrinaires of special privilege had stood at the pilot's wheel on our ship of state. Because the powers of government had been exercised to promote the ends of injustice and bring a palsy to the efforts of the people exerted in their own behalf.

Because the streams intended for the unretarded flow of the people's energies were choked and we found it necessary here and there to cut a new and straighter channel instead of trying to clean out an old and crooked one.

Calls for Diagnosis.

I find no relish in picking or pointing at ancient wounds. But in order to assess the wisdom of the remedies we have administered, let us diagnose the ailments from which we suffered.

They are of such recent existence that it ought not to be necessary to recount them. But my distinguished friend, the Senator from Oregon, who was temporary chairman of the Republican convention, forget to mention them at Cleveland.

And some of those who suffered and have been cured are now the most arrogant in their antagonism to the process which brought them through the crisis. Some of those who were rescued from drowning in the economic flood-waters let loose by the previous twelve "long" years, now complain because in lifting them out we were forced to pull their hair.

All in Nation Chronic Sufferers When Administration Took Charge

When the present Administration assumed office on March 4, 1933, all classes of society bore the marks of such a combination of maladies that it is only possible to mention them in the vaguest outline.

These maladies were not local. They were not set off by metes and bounds. They were not walled in by territorial barriers nor quarantined by yellow flags nailed to a tree.

They were maladies which took root deeply in the whole body of our social and economic fabric and were therefore chronic.

They have been fostered by enduring neglect, magnified by political folly, aggravated by venality and perpetuated by the frantic effort to cure them by their causes.

No nation can prosper long or truly which finds no outlet for the surplus products of its genius and labor.

But in four years—yea, "four long years"—under the guidance of the man who was applauded but not re-nominated at Cleveland, we saw our trade with the world decline from ten billions to three billion dollars per year, setting the feet of three million men upon the streets and turning their faces toward the lengthening bread-lines.

For ten "long" years the condition of the American farmer had steadily declined in spite of the hectic flush of prosperity found on other portions of the economic body.

Each recurring season saw him compelled to accept for the product of his toil less than the cost of their production; saw his debts enlarged and his ability reduced; saw one-half the farms of the Nation under mortgage and one-fifth of these on the verge of foreclosure; saw his foreign markets lost and his home markets reduced; saw mounting and unsalable surpluses in all the basic products of the farm.

The farmer was losing not only his home, his toil, the rewards of his life and energy. He was losing faith in the ability or willingness of organized society through its only agency, government, to give him the same kind of break it had for generations given to others.

He was losing faith in political promises which had made him the victim of cynical indifference and devastating greed.

As if to pile Ossa on Pelion, the avenues of public and private credit were closed to him and the cry of the auctioneer was heard at every courthouse door.

In the realm of finance, chaos greater than was ever seen in this or any other nation spread its shadow across the country.

In the four years from 1928 to 1932 more banks had closed in failure than had ever closed before, and more than in all the rest of the world in the same length of time.

The impact of the crash was so terrific and convulsive that through terror men cried out in anguish of their souls at the loss of their life's savings and their economic independence.

Industrial production had declined to 53 per cent of normal while industrial employment declined to 61 per cent. The purring wheels of production were silent and smokeless smokestacks were silhouetted against the heavens like monuments on a deserted battlefield.

Led on by the sirens of speculative excess, and by the false signals flashed from the doors of the Treasury and the Executive mansion, millions of men and women found themselves stunned by the falling debris of worthless securities foisted on them by investment pirates. They saw their substance drawn from their hands as if by some unseen magic force.

Archaic and unethical methods of business competition obtained illegitimate profit regardless of merit and strangled smaller units of production and distribution.

Sweat shops, long hours, low wages, unwholesome working conditions and the physical and mental degradation of children remained the crowning infamy of portions of American industry.

Unemployment Rolls.

Unemployment rolls never dreamed of by the accumulated pessimism of the century revealed between 15,000,000 and 16,000,000 laborers in idleness.

Down went every index, while the saving of lifetimes ran slowly out like sand in a weary hourglass, and every month new thousands left the security of work until 15,000,000 workers tramped the streets in hopeless agony of effort.

Down we were hurled for "three long years," while confidence like a prodigal went into a far country, and the courage which had braved these barren shores in the days of the Puritan and under the pioneers had extinguished a continental wilderness began to faint on every hearthstone.

"Three long years" of Republican superiority found local charity and relief everywhere collapsing, and millions of human beings were begging for bread, raiment and shelter, and uncounted numbers of them found sleep only by the roadside, or upon park benches from which they crawled with the rising sun like dogs from a kennel.

Upon the crowded street corner the soap-box agitator found it not difficult to lash into fury the emotions which were aroused in the disillusioned souls of men, who had lost not only lands and buildings and jobs and scraps of paper, but their faith in government, in society and justice and the spiritual foundations which sanctify the use and enjoyment of every earthly possession.

In 1929 the debauch of the Coolidge-Hoover revelry and the "twelve long years" of Hamiltonian exploitation were over. The dance was ended at last. The gaunt pipers of bankruptcy, starvation and unemployment had come to claim their fee.

One sudden blast of wrath from outraged truth and decency and honor and prudence and thrift and common sense—and the tinsel tower of false dreams, false pride, false promises and false hope collapsed in irretrievable ruin and dreary desolation.

'3 Long Years'—And Roosevelt Does A Job of Washington and Lincoln

"Three long years" of normalcy and they had wiped out half the values accumulated in this Nation since Christopher Columbus, and half the total income of all the people of these United States.

"Three long years" and—
We did not dare to breathe a prayer
Or to give our anguish scope.
Something was dead in each of us.
And what was dead was hope.

"Knelt and Prayed."

Then came Franklin Roosevelt and assumed the heaviest burden that ever descended on any man since Washington knelt in the snow and Lincoln watched the Confederate flags across the Potomac. As his first act, he also knelt before an altar and prayed. As his second, he opened his breast to the raging storm and checked it in a day.

Where were his detractors then? They had sought refuge in the storm-cellar. They now cry "the Republic is in peril. The republic is lost," and, for all of them, it might have been.

The President of the United States Chamber of Commerce asked the President to assume the powers of a dictator "for three long years."

The Capital was flooded with paper plans of impotent puppets of toryism begging government to assume responsibility for all.

The President scored these suggestions. With every word and act he breathed new confidence in American institutions, confidence in the courage of traditional Americanism, and he twitted the Nation for its fear of fear.

There is not an American who does not know what happened then. Faith returned. Confidence revived. National courage rose like the sun at dawn. Faces that for "three long years" had forgotten how to smile brightened and looked up. Americanism returned to America.

Shall I recount the steps by which this task was charted and is moving to fulfillment?

Have the American people forgotten the valley into which they were led, and are they unconscious of the resistless tread of their feet out of that valley and up the long rough slopes to the heights from which they had descended?

Need I remind you of that stroke of boldness which proclaimed the holiday of banks? Or the passage of the emergency banking act? Or the banking act of 1935, which together restored not only banking but public confidence in banks? Which withdrew banks from the feverish speculation of the stock market and made them banks again? Which strengthened their foundations and guaranteed their deposits and enticed from hiding places billions of dollars which had sought security in seclusion?

Landon Denounced Bank Insurance To Guard the Deposits of Citizens

And need I remind you that the Republicans who manipulated the Cleveland Convention nominated a man for President who before the American Bankers Association denounced the Federal deposits insurance act which guaranteed the deposits of the people throughout the United States, and as Governor of his State exerted every ounce of influence at his command to prevent the banks of Kansas from entering the guaranteed system?

What I now ask and the people have a right to know is whether the miscellaneous assembly of heterogeneous elements which met at Cleveland two weeks ago, and the ticket which it nominated, approve this great financial program and its results, or whether, if returned to power, they will scuttle it again as they scuttled the great system set up by the administration of Woodrow Wilson.

And what I ask and the people have a right to know is whether some of those who journeyed to Washington in the days of their distress with a tin cup, a pair of blue glasses and a dog and obtained from the Treasury, through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, $2,250,000,000 of the people's money in order that they might live, now propose to belittle their past predicament and those who rescued them from it and made it possible for the national banks alone to turn an annual loss of $150,000,000 to a net profit of more than $200,000,000.

During the four long years just prior to the Roosevelt Administration, more than 7,000 banks went out of business, and total deposits in all banks decreased by more than $15,000,000,000.

Ask the 8,000,000 depositors in these vanished banks whether they desire to return to those days of rugged individualism. Ask them whether they favor the repeal or crippling of the guaranty of bank deposits and the election of a man as President who struggled to obstruct both its enactment and its administration.

The answer will be an overwhelming no!

Praises Hull Pacts.

While under Mr. Hoover more than 7,000 banks closed their doors permanently, only 264 State and National banks have closed since March 16, 1933, the end of the bank holiday, and only 8 of them were National banks. Thus far in the good year 1936, not a single National bank in the United States has closed its doors in the faces of the people.

Need I here recount the efforts of the great Secretary of State, Mr. Cordell Hull, to pry ajar the gates of foreign trade and start again the movement of international commerce and good will?

Through the trade agreements authorized by Congress and consummated under that authority, our commerce with other nations has increased from 27 per cent of normal in March, 1933, to 56 per cent of normal in April, 1936, or from $2,933,000,000 in 1932 to $4,330,000,000 in 1935.

But in spite of this, we witnessed in the recent Republican convention a bitter denunciation of the power given to and exercised by the President as being wicked and unconstitutional, in spite of the fact that from 1798 to 1935 Congress has from time to time conferred such authority on the President in the interest of American trade.

The Republican platform proposes to repeal all trade agreements and the law under which they were negotiated.

The hypocrisy and insincerity of those who framed and now accept that pronouncement are revealed in all their nakedness when we recall, as they have conveniently forgotten, that under no less than two past Republican administrations, similar authority was conferred upon Republican Presidents, and no less than ten such trade agreements were entered into without ratification by the Senate.

Stock Inflation Stressed.

Having driven our trade from the seas, locked our ships in the ports and hauled down the American flag as the symbol of commercial enterprise, the Republican leaders now wail and gnash their teeth because we are restoring the flag, the commerce and prestige of the American nation.

What do they offer as a substitute out of the depths of their own political and intellectual bankruptcy? Nothing more nor less than another stroke of commercial apoplexy in the clinic of Smoot and Hawley.

But we are told by the Republican battalion of death, and its illegitimate brother, the American Liberty League, that we are laying the hampering hand of Government on the innocent heads of business and finance. These dismal prophets of panic and propaganda will continue to annoy the American people with their lamentations.

What business are we outraging?

For 12 years—yea, for "12 long years"—the leaders of the Republican Party dwelt in a fool's paradise and allowed the American people to pour billions of dollars into the sink-hole of fraudulent investment securities.

They saw grow up, if they did not foster, a prodigious system of inflated stocks, and saw them peddled from door to door throughout America; and they saw the market places for them juggled and artificially manipulated beyond the power of the average man to escape or comprehend.

With bland and callous unconcern they sat smugly through the carnival until the mask was torn off and the public saw the putrid pestilence of financial debauchery which had blown into their nostrils an alien odor; and the result was the passage of the security and exchange acts for the protection of the people.

These measures were denounced en bloc. But the issue of new and honest securities has increased 50 per cent and the value of old ones by more than 40 per cent.

In their platform they stammer a pious sentence in behalf of regulation of interstate securities and interstate activities of public utilities. But we have already done it.

They sat in the folds of comfortable and luxurious upholstery while a giant system of holding companies was built one upon another in the public utility field, wringing exorbitant profits from investors, operating companies and consumers.

But did the leaders of Old or New Guards in Republicanism lash their faces into scarlet or their hearts into indignation over the spoliation of innocent people?

Among all the tethered and muzzled spokesmen of the doctrine of laissez-faire no warning was uttered or relief proposed. From the lips of none who controlled or were chosen by the Cleveland convention came or has come either movement or utterance indicating either knowledge of the subject or ability or inclination to deal with it.

"Removed Cancer."

The administration of Franklin Roosevelt found the spreading cancer and removed it, and will administer to the affected parts the healing processes of honesty from which will come a healthier growth and fuller service.

What I ask and the people have a right to know is whether the Republican program contemplates the honest enforcement of the new enactments; whether those who shape that program will divorce themselves from whatever allegiance may have held them to these interests; or whether they propose to undo the work we have accomplished.

The croaking noises which rise from the swamps of Old Deal complacency will not suffice. The people call for assurance that the structure of honesty and freedom which we have erected shall not be destroyed. Has that assurance come out of Cleveland? Is it in their platform? Was it couched in their insulting speeches? No!

When we take stock of the Nation's farming interests, how may I adequately portray the new hope, the restored confidence, the economic resurrection of the American farmer.

In 1920, 1924, 1928 and 1932 the hollow and hackneyed promise was made by Republican platforms and candidates to restore agriculture to economic equality with industry. The promise was never fulfilled or intended for fulfillment. It has been repeated again in their platform in 1936, with no more thought of its accomplishment now than in the past.

During the "four long years" of Mr. Hoover the burdens were piled still higher on the farmer's back, while half a billion dollars were taken from the Treasury and poured out into a fantastic exhibition of agricultural pantomimicry.

It is interesting and revealing to revert to the recent past and revive some of the platform and convention utterances of the Republican group which now complains against our successful program of farm rehabilitation.

Recalls Talk of Harding Scoring Democratic Concern for Consumer

In 1916, Warren G. Harding, temporary chairman of the Republican convention, which nominated Charles E. Hughes for President, said:

"The Democratic Party is always concerned about the American consumer. Our Republican achievement is the making of a nation of prosperous producers. Far better at high cost of living and ability to buy than a lowering cost attended by destruction of purchasing capacity." (Applause.)

In the Republican platform of 1920, we find the following declaration:

"The farmer is the backbone of the nation. National greatness and economic independence demand a population distributed between industry and the farm, and sharing on equal terms the prosperity which it holds is wholly dependent on the efforts of both. Neither can prosper at the expense of the other without inviting joint disaster."

Their platform in 1924 contained this declaration:

"In dealing with agriculture the Republican Party, recognizes that we are faced with a fundamental national problem and that the prosperity and welfare of the Nation as a whole is dependent upon the prosperity and welfare of our agricultural population.

"We pledge the party to take whatever steps are necessary to bring back a balanced condition between agriculture, industry and labor."

In his address to the Republican convention of 1928, as temporary chairman, the Hon. Simeon D. Fess made the following statement on agriculture:

"The purpose of the Administration in further aid is to avoid the Government taking over from the farmer his own control of the great industry, but to aid him in that control. This aid is justified because of the inherent nature of an industry of slow turn-over, unregulated production and uncertain consumption. Could agricultural production be held within the limits of consumption the problem would be solved. Or could consumption be indefinitely increased, the problem would be solved. The former can be tempered, but not fully controlled. While the latter may be increased, but within limitations. Where the government can assist in regulating production and increasing consumption, it should co-operate with the farmer for such purposes."

Quotes 1928 G. O. P. Plank.

In the Republican platform of 1928, we find this plan:

"The agricultural problem is national in scope, and as such is recognized by the Republican Party, which pledges its strength and energy to the solution of the same."

"The market promises every assistance in the reorganization of financial lines and where diversification is needed, governmental assistance during the period of transition.

"The Republican Party pledges itself to the enactment of legislation creating a Federal farm board clothed with necessary powers (among other things) to prevent and control surpluses through orderly distribution.

"The Republican Party pledges itself to the development and enactment of measures which will place the agricultural interests of America on a basis of economic equality with other industries to secure its prosperity and success."

Cites Farm Platform Similarity; Showing Democrats Lived Up to It

In 1932 the Republican platform contained this declaration:

"The fundamental problem of American agriculture is in the control of production to such volume as will balance supply with demand. In the solution of this problem the co-operative organization of farmers to plan production, and the tariff to hold the home market for American farmers, are vital elements. A third element, equally vital, is the control of acreage of land under cultivation, as an aid to the efforts of the farmer to balance production."

"Problems Differ."

"The Democratic Party recognizes that the problems of production differ as between agriculture and industry. Industrial production is largely under human control, while agricultural production, because of lack of co-ordination among 6,500,000 individual farm units, and because of the influence of weather, pests and other causes, is largely beyond human control.

"Producers of crops whose total exceeds the needs of the domestic market must continue at a disadvantage until the Government shall intervene as seriously and as effectively in behalf of the farmer as it has intervened in behalf of labor and industry. There is a need of supplemental legislation for the control and orderly handling of agricultural surpluses in order that the price of the surplus may not determine the price of the whole crop."

"We advocate the extention and development of the farm co-operative movement and effective control of crop surpluses so that our farmers may have the full benefit of the domestic market."

I have recalled these party pledges to remind you that by 1932 both political parties had recognized the agricultural problem, not as local, but as national. Both parties advocated the control of production in order to prevent unsalable surpluses. The difference was that the Democratic platform meant what it said and was immediately fulfilled when the opportunity came to us.

The Agricultural Adjustment Act was the fulfilment of this pledge to the farmers of the Nation. Under this act, which was voluntary and not compulsory, the prices of farm products were increased, sometimes doubled and trebled, and more than $3,000,000,000 were added to the annual income of agriculture. It was because of this increase in farm income, and the opening of the facilities of financial credit to the farmer that he has been able to save more than three-quarters of a million homes, begin the payment of his debts, the repair of his houses and the purchase of things produced by others.

It was because of this that in every referendum held among farmers on the continuation of the President's program, it has been approved by a vote of from 2 to 1 to 20 to 1.

It was because of this that when the Supreme Court intervened to nullify this act, and Republican spokesmen were gleefully exulting over it, the voice of American agriculture appealed for the enactment of the soil conservation act under which they are working out another program for the enhancement of the rewards of farm life.

'Long Years' of Republicans In Power Traced by Speaker

Kentuckian Defends New Deal's Agricultural Policies and Denounces the 'Fulminations' of Foes in Philadelphia Address.

fulminations in behalf of controlled agricultural production, their present devotion to uncontrolled abundance seems cheap and hollow.

The business man and the manufacturer control their production to meet their market. When they shut down because of a slack in demand, they "plow under" their machines for the time and discharge their wage earners.

When business is ready to produce for abundance and not for profit, it will then be logical to ask the farmer to do likewise. But not until then.

They have wept over the slaughter of a few little pigs as if they had been tender human infants nestling at their mothers' breasts. They have shed these tears over the premature death of pigs as if they had been born, educated and destined for the ministry or for politics.

But their bitterest tears are not shed over the fate of little pigs. Their real grief comes from the slaughter of the fat hogs of privilege and plunder which they have fed on the people's substance.

They are not weeping because we plowed under a few rows of cotton. Mr. Hoover started that. Their real sorrow springs from the fact that we have plowed under the sordid conceptions of old deal Government and its chance ever to be restored to the control of American life.

Having declared for 20 years that the agricultural problem was national, and four years ago having declared for controlled acreage and production, the Republican leaders and reactionaries now denounce the Roosevelt Administration for the doctrine of scarcity.

Having allowed nearly a million family type farms to become subject to immediate loss, they now avow their love for it, and they declare that benefit payments, such as we have for three years been making, are consistent with a balanced budget.

In 1932, they were for "controlled" production. We enacted it into law. Now they are for "economical" production, by which I suppose they mean "cheap" production. These are weasel words of the first magnitude.

The Roosevelt Administration has inaugurated soil conservation under an intelligent program. The Republican platform tardily follows in the rear.

Denouncing experimentation by the Roosevelt Administration, the Republican platform, for political purposes, proposes to extend "experimental" aid to farmers in developing new crops.

Charge Contradictions.

In one breath, they propose to assist in selling agricultural surpluses abroad by the bargaining process, and in the next they would embargo all agricultural imports, which would render idle 50,000,000 acres of land in cultivation for export crops, and in still another breath, they propose to repeal the law authorizing trade agreements.

Calls G. O. P. Plan to Aid Farmers A Mirage; Bitter With Flattery, Deceit

With that omnipotence which they claim but never exercise, they propose to increase consumption. But it was their dismal failure for "four long years" that rendered consumption by one-third of our population impossible except for the bounty of the Government.

They reject now controlled production, but offer the mirage of a bounty from the Treasury which would ultimately render impossible the balancing of all budgets and the payment of all debts. The whole scheme is put forth to deceive the American farmer, which is the only consistent policy of the platform writers of the Cleveland convention.

After the years of bitter disappointment and disillusionment suffered by the farmers of this Nation as a result of Republican incapacity and duplicity, it is inconceivable that they will again be taken in by those who have perpetrated the wrongs of the past.

To call this a platform is flattery indeed. It is a revolving eye that looks in all directions and sees nothing.

But the people have been told that the foundations of national credit are sinking because of an unbalanced budget.

Deficits and debts! Who began the deficits which have covered every year since 1920? Did the last Republican Administration balance the budget? They merely juggled the estimates of revenue and expenditures. Spending little to retrieve disaster, they increased the public debt by more than four billion dollars.

In the hymns of hate which emanated from the recent outbursts of Republican oratory in national convention, deficits and debts and taxes are treated as a new development of the Roosevelt Administration. The New Deal is portrayed as the father of one, the mother of another and the godfather of the other.

Hoover Deficit Six Billion.

But these Apostles of Concealment withheld from their fervid Jeremiahs the fact that during the four long years of Mr. Hoover the accumulated deficit in the Treasury amounted to more than six billion dollars, although they increased consumers' taxes from 35 to 60 per cent.

They did not tell you, and will not tell you, that during the creation of these deficits and unbalanced budgets there was no Federal relief program and no Public Works program; that States and counties and cities threw this burden on the Federal doorstep, not under Hoover, but under Roosevelt.

It was a task for which the Federal Government was not prepared. But there was no alternative, but to assume it.

At first it was thought that funds should be loaned to the States to be at some time repaid.

Many States Balanced Their Budget By Doing Nothing to Aid Helpless

This course for various reasons, one being that many of the States could not obligate themselves, had to be abandoned. It was understood and it was theoretically required that the States should make substantial contributions to the relief of their own people.

Some of them undertook in good faith to meet the requirement. Others did nothing. Some States were able to balance their budgets because they made no contribution out of their treasuries to feed or clothe or house the helpless.

Politics With Misery.

"Those who seek to play miserable politics with human misery shout that these billions of dollars spent for relief and work have been poured out in reckless waste.

The Works Progress Administration has given employment to 3,500,000 people, 95 per cent of whom were taken from the relief rolls in the several States.

With the money and labor thus provided between 25,000 and 30,000 worthy projects of public need and value have been constructed and repaired. These include school houses, water and sewer systems, parks and playgrounds, public buildings, flood-control systems, airports, farm-to-market highways, streets and other public improvements.

In addition, the Public Works Administration, through grants and loans to local communities, has given employment to more than 3,500,000 workers for a full year.

Who shall assert that these sums have been wasted? Who shall say that these thousands of useful additions to the property of thousands of communities all over the Nation have not brought permanent values not otherwise obtainable? Who shall claim that these two great work administrations have not given a new impetus to the civic standards of the people?

Shall we measure these values against a budget temporarily unbalanced?

Scores Foes' "Debt Song."

But the theme song of our antagonists is the destruction of the Nation's credit, and the wrapping of every new-born child in the swaddling clothes of debt.

When we entered the World War in 1917 our public debt was $2,000,000,000.

When we emerged from it in 1918 the public debt was $26,000,000,000.

By 1929 it had been reduced under sinking fund requirements passed in the Wilson administration to $17,000,000,000.

From March, 1929, to March 4, 1933, that debt was increased to $21,000,000,000 without the inauguration of either a relief or public works program of any consequence whatever.

Hence during the four long years of the Hoover administration the public debt had been increased by $4,000,000,000.

From February 28, 1933, to the present time, the public debt has increased from $21,000,000,000 to approximately $31,500,000,000, an increase of $10,500,000,000.

Cites Achievements.

Out of this increase we have devoted $8,000,000,000 to relief and public works; $3,000,000,000 went to State and national banks, a part of which has been repaid. Out of it have been provided the funds for loans to railroads, insurance companies, industries, cities, counties and States; the refinancing of more than 2,000,000 homes through the Farm Credit Administration and the Home Owners' Loan Corporation; the stimulation of housing under the Housing Administration; the establishment of more than 3,800 Civilian Conservation Camps and the enrollment of more than 1,500,000 young men taken from idleness and taught the lessons of frugality and service in the economy of American manhood; the assistance of more than 600,000 farm families to re-establish their ability for self-support; benefit payments to the hundreds of thousands of farmers who co-operated with the Government and whose contracts were fulfilled, notwithstanding the decision of the Supreme Court; and all the other emergency activities made necessary to escape the blight of the last four years of the Republican regime.

When we deduct from the net increase in the public debt the more than $5,000,000,000 which will be repaid by those who have borrowed from the Government because of the unwillingness or inability of other lending agencies, we find that the net increase in the public debt is but little more than that of the previous Administration, which left little to show for its extravagance.

This great program of rehabilitation has been carried on, not by endangering, but by enhancing the credit of the Government.

In 1932 the bonds of the United States sold as low as 83 cents on the dollar. Since the advent of the New Deal these bonds have risen until today none sell for less than par, while some sell for as much as 17 points above par.

During the same period $175,000,000 in annual interest was saved by a reduction in the interest rates.

Not only have the prices of bonds increased while interest rates were being reduced, but each new issue offered by the Treasury has been largely oversubscribed.

None but a blind and arrogant partisan would assert that the credit of the United States has suffered under the impetus given to public confidence by the administration of Franklin D. Roosevelt.

30 Billions for Defense.

During the world's greatest war we could afford to spend more than 30 billion dollars in defense of our country.

In this war against depression, against the demoralization and disintegration of our social and economic life, we have spent not a dollar to destroy life and property; but every dollar by which we have increased taxes or deficits or the public debt has been devoted to the saving of life and property and of that which makes both life and property worth while—the unconquerable spirit of a matchless people.

We have increased taxes. So did the last Republican Administration. They increased them on consumers. We have adjusted our new taxes according to the ability of the tax payer to pay. We have increased values and profits out of which taxes are paid, but the increase in taxes has not been kept in pace with the increase in income land values which the policies of the Roosevelt Administration have produced.

We shall balance the budget. We shall balance the books in the Treasury. We shall soon ordain that no discrepancy between income and outgo shall exist. But we shall not do it at the expense of human life nor to the degradation of the spirit and morale of our people.

But we are told by the smug and cynical apostles of the status quo that the Supreme Court has nullified some of the acts of this Administration. And while anxious farmers ponder their fate, and laboring men scan the heavens for a rainbow of hope and women and children look in vain for the preservation of their lives and health, a voice from the grave at Palo Alto shouts, "Thank God for the Supreme Court."

I made no attack on the Supreme Court. As an institution I respect it, and I would be both unfair and unjust if it were unwilling to accord to judges on the bench the right to their views of law and constitutions which I claim for myself.

Controversy Not New.

But there is nothing new in controversies over the Constitution. They began in the convention which framed it, and ten amendments were adopted to it by the first Congress that assembled under it.

If, in future, further amendment should become necessary to enable the people to work out their destiny and protect their fundamental rights, or to overcome some archaic interpretation never intended by its framers, I doubt not that the people will face that duty with the same calm intelligence which has guided them in the past.

But from the exultant voices of the tree-sitters and the devotees of the hitching post you would imagine that the Supreme Court had never nullified an act of Congress until Franklin D. Roosevelt became president of the United States.

You would imagine, if you listened to the groans which arise from the doleful kneelers at the Republican wailing wall that we had set out like some blind Samson to pull down the Temple of Constitutional Government and destroy everything within it.

New Deal Held Averting Disaster By Laws to Aid Labor and Farmer

Let us take a look at the record.

During the existence of this Nation more than 25,000 laws have been enacted by Congress. About 67 of them have been nullified by the Supreme Court, and most of them within the past 50 years.

From 1920 to 1930 21 acts were declared null and void. But did any of these decisions strike terror into the hearts of the Old Guard and the Old Dealers? Did anybody don sackcloth and ashes and pray to Heaven to deliver the people from the clutches of an irresponsible Government?

Tried to Stave Disaster.

But when some three or four outstanding acts, conceived and consummated in behalf of labor, or agriculture, and the honest conduct of business and designed to constitute this as a Government of equal rights, are cast aside by the rigors of technicality and the application of antiquated economic predilections in the interpretation of the document, as indicated by one of the Great Dissenters, we are asked to condemn the Legislature and Executive as attempting to inject some alien concept into the fiber of our institutions.

We have sought to serve the American people under the Constitution. We have thought that, under its broad and generous outlines, we might rescue the people from national disaster. We have sought to treat it as a life-giving charter, rather than an object of curiosity on the shelf of a museum.

We shall abide by its decisions and seek to share our program in accordance with them.

But when nine eminent men on the highest court cannot agree on what the Constitution means, is it any wonder that 531 members of the United States Congress find difficulty in agreeing about it?

And when five of those eminent men say a law violates the Constitution, and four of them equally eminent, learned and sincere, and equally alive to the compulsions of modern life, say it does not violate the Constitution, then we are at least relieved of any obligation to underwrite the infallibility of the five whose views prevail.

Jefferson, Jackson Disagreed.

Is the court beyond criticism? May it be regarded as too sacred to be disagreed with?

Thomas Jefferson did not think so. He did not hesitate to denounce the decisions of John Marshall and the majority he led.

Andrew Jackson did not think so. In 1832, speaking of a decision of that court, he said: "John Marshall has made his decision. Now let him enforce it."

Abraham Lincoln did not think so. In his first inaugural address, he said: "If the policy of the Government on vital questions affecting the whole people is to be irrevocably fixed by the decisions of the Supreme Court the instant they are made in ordinary litigation between parties in personal actions, the people will have ceased to be their own rulers, having to that extent practically resigned their Government into the hands of that eminent tribunal."

Mr. Justice Stone does not think so. In his recent dissent from the unfortunate decision of the majority of the court, this great lawyer and great American not only said that the legislation involved was constitutional, in which view Chief Justice Hughes and Justices Brandeis and Cardozo concurred, but criticized the opinion of the majority by saying: "While unconstitutional exercise of power by the Executive and legislative branches of the Government is subject to judicial restraint, the only check upon the exercise of judicial power is our own sense of self-restraint."

Theodore Roosevelt, His Laws Upset, Foresaw Dangers Within Judiciary

What judges? The five who in most of the cases happened to be in a majority of one.

Theodore Roosevelt did not think so. Speaking to the Colorado Legislature in 1910, with reference to two recent decisions of the Supreme Court, he said: "If such decisions as these two indicated the Court's permanent attitude, there would be really a grave cause for alarm, for such decisions, if consistently followed up, would upset the whole system of popular Government."

T. R. Scorned Court Rulings.

Gov. Landon and Col. Knox fall upon each other's necks with hallowed re-union because they rode the Bull Moose behind Theodore Roosevelt in 1912. In that fight Theodore Roosevelt had so little regard for the Court's decisions that he advocated their "recall" by the vote of the people.

These judges have decided that, under the Constitution, the Federal Government cannot lift men, women and children out of the degradation of unconscionable hours, wages or working conditions, because it invades the rights of the States. They have decided that the States cannot do it because it invades the rights of private property. I presume this progressive and logical course will soon lead us to the conclusion that private property cannot do it, because it violates the law of gravitation.

What we need is a new definition and a new interpretation of interstate commerce. Every article that is grown or mined or fabricated in one State and destined for another, by whatever means of transportation, is an object of interstate commerce. It is in competition with every other similar article originating in or destined for other States. Commerce, like water, seeks its own level; like the wind, it goeth where it listeth; and you can no more divide this Nation into 48 air-tight and water-tight economic compartments than you can parcel off the heavens to control the winds or the rains.

Over against the hosannahs of Hoover for the tortured interpretation of the Constitution I place the tortured souls and bodies of men who work and pray, of women whose God-given right is not fulfilled in a sweatshop, and of children whom we have sought to restore to the school room and the playground. One day all these will thank God for Franklin Roosevelt.

But we were told at Cleveland, and will be told until November, that we have taken away the liberties of the people; that we have bound them in chains, and that they are fettered in the dungeons of moral and economic slavery.

Oh, for another Lincoln to strike these shackles from our feet!

What Is This Freedom?

What is this freedom which we have crucified? This liberty we have slain?

Is it the freedom of workers to free collective bargaining? Is it the freedom of farmers to escape the loathsome peonage imposed on them by land and produce speculators? Is it the freedom of investors to circumvent the secret devices of stock manipulators? Is it the freedom of bank depositors from the fear of loss of their savings? Is it the freedom of home owners and home lovers to protect and preserve their firesides?

The fight for freedom in the past three years has been the same fight that Thomas Jefferson made in 1776 for the freedom of the common man; that Lincoln made for the freedom of a race.

Back of Hoover's cry for freedom at Cleveland stood the immemorial pawnbrokers of the Republican Party who shout with glee that they have experienced a counterfeit conversion. Back of him stood the Republican Party's holding company, the American Liberty League, which, if it had existed in 1776 as now officered and manned, would have been against the Declaration of Independence, the Revolutionary War and the Constitution of the United States.

Back of him stood every interest which seeks to coin the flesh and blood of human beings into profits; every stock-jobber, every monopolist of privilege and power; every propagandist for the discredited and defunct alliance between politics and pelf. Back of him stood the figure of William Randolph Hearst, whose twin discoveries constitute the Republican ticket nominated at Cleveland.

"Pocket-Picking" Destroyed.

We have destroyed the liberty of small groups to pick the pockets of the American people; the liberty of organized greed to pervert the agencies of Government to their own enrichment; the liberty of great financial wizards to engulf this Nation in the floodwaters of frenzied speculation; the liberty of smug groups of self-satisfied parasites to pull the strings of puppet satellites in official positions in Washington under the guise of popular government; the liberty of long-pampered interests to use the forms of law to fasten their teeth in the vitals of American economic life; the liberty of power and utility combinations to strangle while they rob alike investors and consumers; the liberty of organized crime to flaunt its black flags in the face of State and Federal statutes; and we have destroyed the liberty of any powerful or selfish group anywhere in this Nation to claim that the Capital of the United States is located anywhere on this continent except in the City of Washington, in the District of Columbia.

Who are those who raise their strident voices against the objectives of the New Deal?

Not the American farmer, whose increased income under it has lifted him out of the economic basement.

Not the American home owner, who dwells under his own roof and asks a heavenly benediction upon it.

Not the laboring man, whose long hours have been shortened and his rewards increased. Not the worker whom we have rescued from the status of a wandering mendicant.

Not the honest investor for whom we have provided information and protection, not the working woman, whose tender and immortal functions, over the dead body of monstrous greed, we have sought to save and beautify.

Not the child whose eyes, until now, beheld the doors of a school room as a mirage, which vanishes upon approach.

Republican Platform Denounces Aid to Jobless, Aged and Infirm

Not the workless millions left by the Hoover Administration as helpless derelicts of an economic and industrial tornado, for whom we have provided work and shelter and attempted security for the future.

The Republican platform denounces the constructive step which we have taken in behalf of the unemployed, the aged and the infirm.

Hold Out Only Vague Hope.

During the 12 long years of night in which the Republican Party controlled the Nation, no attempt was made even to deal with this problem. All they hold out now is a vague and impossible promise designed to deceive and thwart the hopes of 11,000,000, aged people throughout the Nation, and countless millions who will become aged in the years of the future.

Who opposes this new fight for Democracy today? Who throws across the pathway of real liberty lighted by Thomas Jefferson, and relighted by Jackson and Lincoln and Woodrow Wilson, the impediments of falsity and the tangled timbers of deception? Who seeks to divert the masses of men from the trail which leads to real and not a spurious freedom? Who pours into the faces of our people the gas poison of doubt and fear and suspicion?

Not the more than a million and a half young men from every State and town who have been offered a haven from idleness and possible crime.

Not the thousands of towns and cities throughout America whose needs for better living advantages have been gratified.

Not the anxious fathers and mothers of the Nation from whose hearts has been removed the fear of the kidnaper and the gangster.

Not the millions of school children whose facilities for the enjoyment of learning have been increased.

Not the millions of sufferers of torrential and devastating floods whose safety and protection we have authorized.

Not the consumers of electric energy for whom we have provided an honest yardstick.

Not the honest business man who asks nothing of Government except the assurance that he shall be permitted to compete with others on a basis of honesty and justice.

Not the great moral leaders and apostles of America, who have seen at last some of the sacred precepts of the Golden Rule applied to the practices, motives and powers of Government.

"America is in peril," say the platform fabricators of the Republican Old Guard. It would indeed be true if they should ever again obtain control.

President Expected to Lead.

"The powers of Congress have been usurped by the President," say Hearst and Mills and Moses and Bingham and Hoover. The same was said of Washington and Jackson and Lincoln. The American people expect their President to be a leader, not a graven dummy in the lap of some ventriloquist.

"Regulated monopoly has displaced free enterprise," say those who put together Joseph's coat at Cleveland. When, under their dominations, did anybody see or hear of free enterprises? Uncontrolled monopoly was their middle name.

The New Deal Administration constantly seeks to ursurp the rights of the States, say these master builders. But for nearly a century and a half they have sought to hamper both State and national authority when directed against their pampered pets in politics and business.

Country Dishonored by Candiddte Who, 3 Years Ago, Urged Inflation

It has dishonored our country by repudiating its most solemn obligations, and on that platform they nominated a candidate who, three years ago, urged the payment of public and private debts in money of the printing press, redeemable in neither silver nor gold.

It has created a vast multitude of new offices. So runs the monotonous refrain.

If we had continued the Republican policy of doing nothing about relief, nothing about the farm crisis, nothing for labor or business, nothing for homes and farms burdened with debt, nothing for one-fourth of the distressed population of this Nation, it would have been possible not to create new offices. But you cannot double the tasks of Government and not increase the number of employes.

Do Nothing Vs. Do Something.

If this is Republican condemnation of doing something as opposed to doing nothing, let them say so and take the consequences. If it is a Republican approval of doing something and a condemnation of using the means to accomplish it, it is rank hypocrisy and unworthy of notice.

Figures are important to register results, but the astonishing figures of American recovery are not the most important thing.

There has been no such volume of recovery in so short a time in the whole history of the world as occurred here in the first six months of 1933. It paused momentarily in 1934, but it has gone steadily upward with no sustained recession. It has included every form of human activity.

Cites Improvement Figures.

I do not wish to burden this address with statistics, but for the sake of those who measure life by figures on a table, I give you the essential indexes of improvement:

Farm prices 50 per cent.
Farm income 53 per cent.
Farm purchasing power 40 per cent.
Factory payroll 59 per cent.
Purchasing power of same 50 per cent.
Factory employment 33 per cent.
Industrial earnings 35 per cent.
Stock market prices 40 per cent.
Bank deposits 33 per cent.
Railroad traffic 16 per cent.
Automobile production 30 per cent.
Construction permits 50 per cent.
Industrial production 50 per cent.
National bank earnings 100 per cent.
Decline in commercial failures 66 per cent.
Increase in national income 50 per cent.
New securities issued 50 per cent.

Perhaps the most significant of all, to industry, is the decline of 66 per cent in the rate of business failures and the decline of bank failures of 100 per cent.

But there are human values far beyond these figures. The important point is not merely that farm prices have increased, but that American agriculture has been rescued from impending ruin. It is not merely that the condition of labor has been improved by the reduction of the number of unemployed from 15 millions to 10 millions of workers, but that labor has been dragged back from the brink of peonage and that with one-fourth of our population destitute, their health, comfort and self-respect have been maintained, and there has been no sedition, riot or bloodshed during the worst human catastrophe in our history.

It is not merely that banking and industry have been saved from bankruptcy, but that faith in banking and industry have been revived.

The answer to that enigma of denunciation some of those who have been saved and others who may not have needed it is as old as Hamiltonian reaction and Jeffersonian Democracy. This has been a balanced recovery. Benefits have been bestowed upon all groups with as even a hand as Government can assure.

But there are other gains which have been recorded in the past three years of which I am thinking, and of which the American people are thinking.

Moral Gain Above Dollars.

These are the moral and spiritual contributions we have made to the life of our people which are beyond computation by the standards of the dollar.

We talk of the gold standard, the gold content of the dollar, and men who do not know the history or the significance of money talk about the gold dollar and the so-called return to gold, denying the obvious truth that the American dollar, with a larger reserve of gold behind it today than ever before, is the soundest medium of exchange among all the nations of the world today.

But I am thinking of those immortal reserves of character which partake of the essence of the heart and soul of a Nation which have been strengthened and perpetuated by what we have been trying to do.

I am thinking that, while we have preserved homes and acres and railroads and banks and insurance companies and factories and all the tangible and corporal symbols of the people's wealth, we have also preserved the intangible and immeasurable values that take form in the realms of pride and service and honor.

We have preserved and stimulated respect for law and the rights of the average man.

We have increased the loyalty of the people to the Government which should be their servant.

We have restored the faith from which must spring the defenders of the Flag and of the Constitution.

We have cultivated a study of the science of Government and its truest functions among millions to whom Government was something apart and detached and without meaning.

We have renewed and re-enforced the belief that after all, Government and trusted leaders may hear and heed the cry of the humblest worshiper at the shrine of equality.

We have rekindled the vanishing faith in the survival of the best as well as the fittest.

We have revitalized the answer to the question which has rung through all the ages "Am I My Brother's Keeper?"

We have sought to confound the cynics who despise the moral conceptions of the more abundant life for which the Master lived and died.

Juster Order Established.

We have, under the leadership of a man of rare and superb courage, endeavored not to tear down what others have legitimately constructed, not to destroy the material rewards of honest toil of mind or body, but to establish a fairer, juster order that will give to every man, woman and child in this Republic the right to stand erect in pride and self-respect, to see the stars on high and share the glory of the sun.

We meet here within the shadow of Liberty Hall, in this City of Brotherly Love, in this State of William Penn, where eight score years ago Thomas Jefferson gave to the world an unfamiliar creed of human freedom. It was here that he became the spokesman of the drawers of water and hewers of wood. It was here that the foundations of our faith were laid.

It is here again, in the mist of these historic scenes, that we invoke the spirits of departed patriots, rekindle our belief in the nobility of their cause and re-dedicate ourselves to its complete fulfillment.

It is here, with such a leadership, in such a cause, with such a record, that we accept the challenge and hasten our feet to the field of battle.

May I conclude with this quotation:

"No greater thing could come to our land today than a revival of the spirit of religion—a revival that would sweep through the homes of the Nation and stir the hearts of men and women of all faiths to a realization of their belief in God and their dedication to His will for themselves and for their world. I doubt if there is any problem—social, political or economic—that would not melt before the fire of such a spiritual awakening."

The American people are not afraid to follow, they will follow, the man who spoke those words. He is the present and the next President of the United States, Franklin Delano Roosevelt.

Democrats Plan Honor For Dempsey, Tunney

Philadelphia, June 23 (AP).—Col. Edwin A. Halsey, sergeant-at-arms of the Democratic convention, set out today to unite in common cause Jack Dempsey and Gene Tunney, who fought for the heavyweight championship of the world ten years ago in this city.

"I've got Dempsey signed up for an honorary sergeant-at-arms," said Halsey, "and now I'm trying to land Tunney.

"I want them to march down the aisle together and take their oath from the platform."

In September, 1926, Tunney won the world's heavyweight boxing championship from Dempsey in Municipal Stadium, about two miles from Municipal auditoruim, where the convention is being held.

'Rue de la Paix' Lively Feature Of Convention

Philadelphia, June 23.—The Rue de la Paix of Philadelphia is a flight of seven steel-topped concrete steps leading from the sidewalk into the Bellevue Stratford Hotel.

You know the line which says that sooner or later, if you wait long enough, everybody in the world passes along the Rue de la Paix in Paris.

To the observer here it seems that everybody in the world passes up and down this flight of well-worn steps at least twice.

There has been some talk of putting a sign over the facade of the hotel, saying "Through these portals pass the most beautiful Democrats in the world," but this is still in the rumor stage.

By hooking your elbows over the brass rail along the side, so that you won't be swept away by the steady pushing crowd that shoves in and out of the hotel in a solid mass all day and most of the night between lines of goggling citizenry, you see and hear things like this:

"Hey, you've got two cigars in your mouth!"

The old gentleman starts, and then answers, squinting down his nose:

"Eh? Well, well, so I have. Still, what can I lose? If one goes out, I'll have the other." And the slow pushing throng carries him triumphantly out of view.

Wants Scrambled Eggs.

Three young men, faultlessly dressed in evening clothes, white ties and top-hats step out of a cab. It is 3 p. m. One of them says:

"I'm going to have them send up some scrambled eggs before I go to sleep."

Three large Irish cops barge importantly out of the hotel followed by a slim young lady in a wide black sailor hat and a black cire satin afternoon jacket. This is the lovely Mrs. W. Forbes Morgan, wife of the secretary of the Democratic National Committee. One of the policemen bellows to a member of the motor bandit patrol, on a motorcycle in the street:

Forgot That Dinner.

A plump man with a budicund nose is next. He groans:

"They gave a dinner this afternoon on the roof with me as the guest of honor!"

"What's the matter with that?" asks a friend.

Then comes Senator Kenneth McKellar of Tennessee. He meets Representative Robert L. Doughton, of North Carolina, on the sidewalk. Says McKellar, age 67:

"Hello old timer!"

Answers Doughton, age 72:

"Hello young-timer!"

Next is a young member of the New York Tammany delegation. He says to a friend:

"Hey, get a gander at the old screwball doing the off-to-Buffalo!"

The old "screwball" is the Governor of a Southern State," perfectly sober, but exuberantly doing a Bill Robinson tap-dance routine up and down the steps.

$1.25 For a Cab.

Then comes Senator Bennett Champ Clark, of Missouri, with a Congressman. The Congressman wails:

"A dollar and a quarter it cost me in a cab to the Convention Hall this morning, and I've got an insurance payment due next week!"

Senator Clark answers:

"I took the subway down and walked two blocks. Get smart, son!"

A Congressman from California appears. He mutters to a companion:

"Let's give the nose trick to the next cop we see."

"What's the nose trick?" asks the friend.

"Bend your fist like this, see? Then pinch the cop's nose between the first and second knuckles and hit the back of your hand downward with your other fist. Boy, it almost tears his nose off."

The friend stares at him suspiciously and then states firmly:

"No More Spiked Heels."

A woman with her gray hair beautifully tinted that faint blue shade Lady Mendl introduced, and wearing a silver fox cape, stops on the stairs, moans, and tells her companion, a girl in a blue dotted-swiss dress:

"This is positively the last time in my life I wear spike heels anywhere. From now on I wear moccasins."

A young lady in a yellow peasant linen dress shrieks as she steps down to the sidewalk and her wide-brimmed off-the-face hat blows smartly away in the gutsy wind. Then she asserts loudly and disgustedly, her hands on her hips:

"I swore I'd never chase it if it blew off again, and I won't," but a bellhop brings it back and she stamps off, angrily dusting the hat.

That's the way it goes all day and it's positively the most fun in Philadelphia, and certainly the cheapest.

Session Is Brief.

The morning session of the convention proper was fairly brief, as sessions go, and was marked by the apt use of the massive organ underneath the platform. As Gen. Farley derisively shouted "three long years" the organist played a long phffft note, sounding for all the world like a Bronx cheer amplified a thousand times. This drew a great laugh from one and all.

Prominent on the stand is Eddie Dowling, the well-known Broadway comedian, who is directing the entertainment features of the convention. The show he is putting on, far more elaborate than the Republican festivities at Cleveland, has thus far had one serious defect, the lack of timing by the stage band on a platform in the rear of the hall.

Text of Farley's Speech Opening Convention at Philadelphia

Copyright, 1936, by the Associated Press.

Philadelphia, June 23.—The text of the address delivered by Chairman James A. Farley of the Democratic National Committee in opening the Democratic National Convention today follows:

In inaugurating this convention I am conscious of a great responsibility. The occasion which brings us together is one of the most momentous in the history of our country.

The continuance of the New Deal is the issue. The question before the American people is clearcut and cannot be disguised. That question is: Shall we continue the New Deal which has rescued our country from disaster and despair or shall the Government be turned back to the Old Dealers who wrecked it?

There you have the issue stripped of all camouflage.

The gravity of this issue is the measure of our responsibility as we assemble here today. Is the Nation to move forward or is it to turn backward to the Old Dealers of such recent and bitter memory?

Fortunately for us and for the country, we know now that the Old Dealers stand right where they have always stood. The convention at Cleveland, both in manner and method, revealed once more that old habits are not abandoned.

Gravity of Situation Makes Race "Different."

I am not trying to stir the members of the committee which has served so faithfully, or the delegates to this convention, into any frenzy of excitement by stressing the gravity of what lies ahead of us, and which makes this campaign different from the ordinary political struggle inseparable from a Presidential election.

I merely wish to impress on all of you the significance of the task to which we are committing ourselves. I want to point out that where the political skies seem fair for our party and our destined candidates, and all of us believe that the country will echo our desires in unmeasured enthusiasm and a record majority, confidence in the outcome is not enough.

The consequences of the coming election are vital to the future of this Nation. Because of their gravity no one of us dares do less than his utmost toward swelling the majority that will testify to the national desire that the processes of recovery, initiated and carried on by Franklin D. Roosevelt, shall not be interrupted.

That verdict must be so overwhelming, so conclusive, so compelling that nobody can doubt that the country is united in its determination that there shall be no backward step in our progress.

Our party will remain in power so long as its ideals and purposes do not deviate from the straight path of public service.

We are a fortunate party; first, in the high patriotism and caliber of our President; second, in that we are on the right side both morally and economically.

The minority party has, by force of circumstance, been compelled to adopt a platform unsurpassed in the history of party declarations for platitudes and vague promises.

Some day, they pledge themselves to accomplish what our Administration has already accomplished. Some day they will put the farmer in the same economic position that the New Deal has put him, but never do they say how they are going to do it.

Some day they are going to establish business on a basis comparable with that upon which our conduct of national affairs has placed it—but first they would go back to the system that brought on the great panic.

Some day the great corporations are to be assured of all the favors they enjoyed under Republican rule and at the same time everybody is to have equal opportunity and unbounded prosperity.

And their some-day candidates through this platform will tell the country, as a distracted mother tells her fretful babies, they will have the moon for which they have been futilely reaching and wailing because they cannot reach it.

They are going to relieve poverty, without spending money, provide jobs without it costing industry anything, and bring happiness and contentment to everybody—some day.

As chairman of the Democratic National Committee it has become my happy duty to call this convention to order; to present the recommendations of the committee for the convention's consideration of temporary officers to conduct the deliberations of this body until the convention itself shall complete the permanent organization. Then I shall relapse into my status as a delegate from the State of New York.

Summarizes Work of National Group.

Before I relinquish this gavel I wish to make a brief report on the work of the national organization since it assumed direction of the party's affairs at the 1932 convention.

That convention inaugurated a new era in our country's affairs. Through the masterful work of the candidates of the 1932 convention and the Congresses which were elected in sympathy with them, our country has been lifted out of the worst depression in our history onto a fair highway that leads to permanent prosperity.

Ordinarily, as you know, the national committee of our own and of the minority party fall into a deep sleep at the close of a convention and hibernate for four years. Following the precedent established by my predecessor, the Democratic National Committee has taken a different course, actuated by the belief that a Presidential campaign, with all that it means to our Nation, is not something to be hurried through in a few hectic weeks.

As a matter of fact, we could not have remained idle, even if we had so desired. As soon as they thought that partisan politics made it necessary, the party we had ousted from control of the Government began sniping at the policies they had applauded and participated in.

They were grateful for these policies when our country was undergoing the extreme crisis of the disaster their President and their Administration had permitted to come upon us.

As soon as the huge financial interests that have been the backbone of every Republican Administration of recent years had been rescued from the depths of loss and again began to make money, they exerted their pressure, furnished the funds and engaged in a crusade of vituperation and detraction in an effort to destroy the faith of the people in the President.

He had brought them out of their desperate state when they were helpless to do it themselves. But he was insisting that fortune for the few and poverty for the many did not spell prosperity and they, feeling themselves threatened with the deprivation of the unearned and uneconomic favors and privileges they had enjoyed so long, inaugurated the movement for a return to the old system of everything for them and nothing for the plain people.

Then it was that the minority party orators and the newspapers controlled by the big interests began telling our people that Franklin D. Roosevelt sought to be a dictator. Then it was that the laws Congress had enacted, and for which many of the Senators and Representatives of their own party had voted, were denounced as being intended to make our country a socialistic and communistic state.

Then it was that they proclaimed that the measures undertaken and functioning successfully to bring back a restoration of business, decrease unemployment, and to take care of the jobless until such time as returning prosperity would re-absorb them into normal industry, were all the product of dreamers and visionaries.

President Pictured in Role of Despot.

Anybody unfamiliar with American politics would have gathered from these outcries that our hard-working, systematic, public-serving President was sitting in the White House with a war helmet on his head, booted and spurred, and ready to lead a bayonet charge on Congress if they hesitated in carrying out his despotic orders.

Under these conditions, we naturally had to get busy. I will not attempt to outline for you the activities of the organizations in the various sections of the county, but I do want to tell you that without exception, the State Democratic authorities co-operated effectively and enthusiastically, and I want to thank them publicly for their loyalty, which in no small degree is responsible for the state of confidence in which we meet today.

You are all familiar, I believe, with the work performed at national headquarters in Washington, and I feel authorized to express in your name our thanks to my colleagues at headquarters for the faithfulness with which they have discharged their task.

Perhaps I ought to mention in this connection another agency that has contributed much to the jubilant feeling we have in regard to the outcome of the election in November.

Do I need to say that I refer specifically to the Republican convention in Cleveland? By their platform they would have assured our victory, I believe, even had our national organization remained dormant during the whole pre-convention period.

Confronted by the impossible task of reconciling the standpat views of the powers behind the minority party with their anguished necessity of making a pretense of liberalism, they turned loose the most extraordinary platform on record in this country.

Our friends, the enemy, had an opportunity to be sincere, if they had any regard for consistency, they would have renamed Herbert Hoover, who represents the classical attitude of their party, and then we would have had a direct and frank contest before the American people of the New Deal and the Old Deal.

They passed him up despite his impassioned stampeding speech, which naturally failed. For you cannot stampede an elephant securely chained to the picket posts of evasion and straddling.

They could have named Senator Borah, but he was carmarked with the stigma of liberalism. So they had to find a candidate whom they could present as conservative enough to meet the specifications of the Du Pont Liberty Leaguers in the East, while appearing fiercely Liberal in the West.

Says Even Republicans Find Platform "Joke."

Nobody takes the Cleveland platform seriously—not even our political adversaries.

The leading Republican newspapers at the National Capital in a painful effort to make the document sound like sense, said in its appraisal of the Republican declaration of principles: "On the whole the platform avoids the mistake of being too specific, properly concentrating on principles."

It mentions some of what it terms "not infrequent conflicts between an excellent generality and a stupid particularization." However, it sums up the grand total by assuring the Republican nominee that he has a complete license to forget the platform, in this impressive language:

"The Republican Party has thus assured its standard bearer of the freedom of action, within a framework of principle, which a competent leader must be allowed."

There you have it. They were compelled by the same inexorable circumstance to produce a platfor maimed to satisfy liberals and conservatives, the bold and the timid among the two conflicting elements of their party's make-up.

Even when it came to choosing their Vice Presidential candidate they had to follow the same hazardous course. The larger men refused the post so they picked a gentleman, doubtless a good editor, who has never held public office; never strayed into fields other than his own business—even more widely unknown to the public than his chief.

Our own beloved Vice President has shown that the office is neither an ornament nor a sinecure. John N. Garner's long experience in the public service has been of inestimable value during the grave period of restoration.

The Vice President presides over the United States Senate. He knows what the doings of that body mean and his ripened judgment is available when the Senate divides and his vote determines the final result.

It is no part of my function to suggest to the resolutions committee the platform upon which our candidates will run.

But I do not think I am transgressing when I voice my belief that that document will be one to which they can commit themselves without laughing, and can swallow without choking.

And, incidentally, it will be the only major party platform adopted this year of the sort.

Holds Aid to Public Brings Popularity.

Apart from everything else we have the advantage in this convention not only of knowing what we are striving for, but on whom we may depend to carry out the program. We are in the happy position of being enlisted on the popular side. It is the popular side because of what our Administration has accomplished for the public welfare.

Good government is the best politics. That was true when Jefferson founded our party, and the formula has not changed. Circumstances and conditions change. The immortal principles that have made us the freest, most secure people in the world remain changeless.

Selfish interests may usurp authority for a time, but always there arises a figure clear-eyed enough to see the peril, wise enough to grasp the people's desires and brave enough to hew the way through the barriers of influence and illicit power and set us again on the right path.

For three years ours has been a people's Government. It is our job to keep it a people's Government.

That is what I meant when I spoke of the responsibilities incident to this gathering. We knew how millions have been poured out to prepare the ground for an assault aimed to bring back the reeking period that piled up great fortunes for those on the inside, and finally brought the country to the verge of bankruptcy.

No pirate of the olden days chased a galleon that had escaped him more fiercely than will the backers of the Republican Party pursue the enterprise of getting back the prize they held so long.

The pursuing corsairs used whatever flag that served their purpose to close with their quarry. They did not fly the skull and cross bones banner, but raised the pennant under which the prize was sailing to disguise their plundering purpose.

Perhaps that illustrates the new plan of the Republican platform and the uniform of their captain, in the West with the epaulets of liberalism, and in the East with the insignia of conservatism.

Behind the Republican ticket is the crew of the Dupont Liberty League and their allies, which have so far financed every undercover agency that has disgraced American politics with their appeals to race prejudice, religious intolerance and personalities so gross that they had to be repudiated even by the regular Republican organization. They will continue to disown these snaky assaults—and to seek to profit by them.

But the leaguers will never gain the prize. The real New Deal, sane and orderly—not the wild, visionary, socialistic or communistic creation of its enemies' imagination—will sail on serenely, to the goal of complete recovery; and at its helm that calm, capable and courageous commander, Franklin D. Roosevelt.

thus assured its standard bearer of the freedom of action, within a framework of principle, which a competent leader must be allowed."

"There you have it," the national chairman said. "They were compelled by the same inexorable circumstances to produce a platform aimed to satisfy liberals and conservatives, the bold and the timid among the two conflicting elements of the party's make-up."

Farley said the Democratic platform will be one to which the party's candidates "can commit themselves without laughing, and can swallow without choking."

Leaving the platform discussion Farley brought cheers from the delegates by declaring: "For three years ours has been a people's government. It is our job to keep it a people's government."

Farley brought his speech to a close with a rousing reference to President Roosevelt. It was a signal for a stampede in the convention. The band played and the delegates began to march about the hall. Banner after banner joined in the procession as the demonstration grew. Farley watched, smiling, making no attempt to bring the convention back to order. The demonstration continued for nearly half an hour.

In his welcoming speech at the opening session, Mayor Wilson told of "the wonders of Philadelphia," and informed the delegates that "this week polities are adjourned in the City of Brotherly Love." This brought smiles, because Philadelphia always has been strongly Republican.

Senator Key Pittman, of Nevada, went to the platform to present the motion to recess until tonight. First, however, he made a short speech in the course of which he referred to Farley as "a plain, simple, guileless man."

Constitution Group To Fight Roosevelt

Houston, Tex., June 23 (AP).—John Henry Kirby, chairman of the Southern Committee to Uphold the Constitution, said today that organization, claiming 350,000 registered members in 17 States, would oppose re-election of President Roosevelt.

Kirby, wealthy lumberman and outspoken foe of the "New Deal," said he was not sure whether the group would support Gov. Alf M. Landon or put its own Presidential candidate in the field. He said a mail poll of members was under way to determine the committee's next move.

"If we decide to throw our support to the Republican nominee," Kirby said, "it will be as Democrats. We do not have any intention of becoming Republicans but we will exert all our efforts to stop Roosevelt. We will fight for the principles of the Democratic Party and the Constitution."

Allen to Plead In Committee Today for Vote

Philadelphia, June 23.—Commissioner George Allen will appear before the resolutions committee of the Democratic National Convention tomorrow morning with a request that residents of the District of Columbia be allowed to vote.

Allen will ask that the committee adopt the following plank as part of the platform:

"We favor granting to the District of Columbia voting representation in the Senate, House of Representatives and electoral college and access to the United States courts."

Individuals Seen.

Meanwhile, District delegates are busy seeing individual members of the committee and individual delegates impressing on them the fact more than 500,000 American citizens who are residents of the District are not permitted to vote.

The only time the District is permitted to participate in national affairs is when delegates from Washington vote in party nominating conventions. The Washington delegates have the choice seats in the convention hall here, directly in front of the speakers' platform.

Another "District tea party" was staged tonight with Indians passing over the small packets of tea to the delegates. To the packets are attached cards calling attention to the fact that the District of Columbia must submit to "taxation without representation."

Tomorrow the Indians will appear at the convention hall to make their appeal to the delegates there. They also will ride about the city in a bus, on the sides of which will be large signs appealing for votes for the District.

Tomorrow night Allen and John B. Colpoys, United States marshal for the District and chairman of the delegation, will tell of their campaign over the radio. The broadcast, which will start at 7 p. m., will be "piped" to Washington and broadcast from WJSV there.

Chase Will Urge Democrat Planks

The International Reform Federation announced in a statement last night that its superintendent, Canon William Sheafe Chase, had left for Philadelphia to urge incorporation of two planks in the Democratic national platform.

"One plank," said the announcement, "was to promise to enact a law to forbid contributions by individuals or corporations to major parties, as a felony, but to provide that Congress shall appropriate an equal sum for the campaign expenses of each major party, and also for the refunding of campaign expenses of other national parties, in the same proportion per votes cast, as to the major parties.

"The other plank asked is to promise to keep the United States out of war by effectuating the Kellogg-Briand Pact as the best possible way of keeping war out of the world."

Convention Asked For Cotton Tariff

Earlier, Comer, Alabama textile operator, wired Gov. Bibb Graves, head of the Alabama delegation at Philadelphia, calling attention to provisions in the Republican and third party platforms for protection against "unfair importations."

The telegram to Black said, in part:

"We are not dealing with anything approaching the old idea of Republican tariff for trust made or price controlled goods.

"There is freest competition among the 1,200 units in our industry. We are asking for the same tariff protection that the sugar beet growers of the West have against sugar cane growers of Cuba."

Lemke Backing By Townsend, Smith Delayed

Pension, Share the Wealth Leaders Meet With 3d Party Candidate.

By the Associated Press.

A "strategy conference" developed yesterday that support of the Townsend old age pension movement and the share-the-wealth clubs would not be pledged to Representative William Lemke of North Dakota, Union Party Presidential candidate, pending a decision by the Townsend convention in Cleveland next month.

This was emphasized by Dr. F. E. Townsend, coauthor of the pension plan, and the Rev. Gerald K. Smith, head of the share-the-wealth clubs organized by the late Senator Huey P. Long, after a long talk with Lemke in the House Office Building.

Just before the conference the North Dakotan announced that Representative Burdick, also of North Dakota, would head the Union Party's campaign committee and would open national headquarters in Chicago next week. Both men are Republicans.

That Townsend and Smith each claimed a following of 5,000,000.

That Townsend and Smith would "stand together" in all events.

That the three were agreed on the strategy of concentrating on one common Congressional candidate in districts where Townsend, share-the-wealth or other candidates—not Democrats or Republicans—are opposing each other.

That while the groups might cooperate for Presidential campaign purposes, there was no thought of merging permanently into one organization.

That Townsend stands for some of Lemke's principles, and for many of those held by the Rev. Charles E. Coughlin, head of the National Union for Social Justice, but that his co-operation depended upon expediency in furthering the Townsendites' aims.

(Coughlin has indorsed Lemke, and attended a Union Party meeting Sunday at Great Barrington, Mass.)

That the details of financing the Union Party campaign had not been figured out, although Lemke and Burdick lean to the "penny and dimes" contribution method as opposed to big donations.

While Lemke insisted reports of a parley at Detroit Friday with Coughlin and representatives of the other groups looking to a coalition were "not true," Burdick said there would be such a meeting and was of the impression that a discussion of a coalition was one of its purposes.

T. R., Jr., Boomed For Lehman's Job

New York, June 23 (AP).—The merchants and salesmen for Ted Roosevelt League opened headquarters here today to campaign for Theodore Roosevelt, jr., for the Republican nomination for Governor.

Fred M. Lewis, the league president and former vice president of the National Council of Traveling Salesmen, said "a vigorous campaign" would be carried on although Roosevelt "will not come out for the governorship at this time."

Roosevelt said "I am not making any campaign for any office."

Mrs. Boole Predicts Return of Prohibition

New York, June 23 (AP).—Eventual return of prohibition was predicted today by Mrs. Ella A. Boole, president of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union.

"I don't attempt to predict exactly when prohibition will be made law again in America," she said after her return from the National W. C. T. U. convention in Tulsa, Okla.

"One thing would have to be altered, of course, and that is the administration of the law."

Mrs. Boole said the W. C. T. U. has expanded its program and now actively opposes gambling and narcotics as well as liquor.

Mower in Philadelphia Seeks Hoover 'Grass'

Philadelphia, June 23 (AP).—The Democrats today poked some pretty pointed fun at Herbert Hoover and his 1932 prediction that if Roosevelt were elected the grass would grow in the streets of a hundred cities.

An old-fashioned hay mower, followed by a hay rake and a hay wagon, all drawn by mules, cruised about Philadelphia's streets. They carried posters proclaiming that their errand was to find the grass predicted by Hoover and that they had discovered none.

Third Party Leaders Confer at Capitol

In the 27 minutes that followed the Democrats wasted their strength so completely they had neither heart, lungs nor spirit for the planned demonstration after the speech of Senator Barkley.

At 10:20 p. m. Senator Barkley, resplendent in white flannel trousers and sack coat, his hair slicked down for the first time since Congress convened in January, was escorted to the platform for his major effort of the year.

Full Oratorical Stride.

Senator Barkley, striking ful oratorical stride in the first line of the first paragraph of his speech, rolled into battle like the light brigade at Sebastopol and Balaclava.

Nostrils high, snorting defiance and scorn at the Republican Party, the veteran keynoter threw harpoons into the body of the enemy as fast as he could take aim, jerking them out only to rub salt into the wounds before spearing another vital spot.

The audience had more fun than any large political audience this year, laughing, howling, booing the mention of Hoover and Landon and Knox, jeering at the "Three Long Years" and repeatedly shouting teihr glee.

Agai nand again voices cried: "Pour it on, Barkley!" and "Hit 'em again, Kentucky!" and so Barkley poured it on, concentrating all his muscles in a half-crouching position that shoved everything he had in his voice on into the six microphones and two public address pickups.

Filled to Rafters.

The hall, while smaller by 3,500 seats than the Cleveland Auditorium, is better groomed and tonight was filled to the rafters, in contrast to the vast empty acreage of seats in the Republican gathering.

Down in the hall we met the youngest delegate and the youngest alternate at the convention and maybe youngest in all conventions yet.

Miss Sarah Hale, 18, of Rogersville, Tenn., is the youngest delegate. She is the daughter of W. B. Hale, assistant attorney general of Tennessee, and is a lovely little girl, indeed, even according to hard-boiled photographers, who flashed bulbs in her face all night. She wore a great picture hat of cerise straw and a cerise cloak with leg of mutton sleeves over a kalsomine-blue dress.

The youngest alternate is her friend, Miss Lillie Friedman, 15, of Knoxville, Tenn. They paraded together seven times around the hall and then refused even to move.

Kitty Carlisle, nee Cohen, of Louisiana, the moving-picture star whose last appearance was with the Marx Brothers in "A Night at the Opera," sang "America" to begin the evening—she, with young James Roosevelt, the President's oldest son, and Representative Ham Fish, of New York, the quondam Vice Presidential candidate on the defunct Borah ticket for the Republican nomination, were high-spots in the long evening's parade of assorted celebrities.

No Expense Is Spared.

It takes both considerable subsidizing from above as well as the expenditure of money by each State delegation to produce a rousingly hot demonstration, and so no expense was spared to make America's ears ring via the radio.

Bazookas, kazoos, tin brass, and even cardboard trumpets, miniature trombones, whistles, cow bells, megaphones and clackers were distributed to delegates and sold to alternates and galleryites.

Many in the huge crowd wore costumes. The West Virginia delegation had a squad of hill-billies in assorted old clothes, each carrying a musical instrument with which to emphasize their placarded gospel of "Roosevelt or Ruin."

The Pennsylvania delegation had its own band in red coats and white pants. Others wore gold stovepipe hats two feet high and battered derbies, while the Rhode Island delegation sported red African sun-helmets, calling themselves the Rhode Island Reds.

Allen Is Sent Wire By 'Primary' Foe

In response to Commissioner George Allen's plea for District suffrage through use of tea packets at the Democratic National Convention, John P. Mullen, author of the Primary Bill, which Allen opposed, yesterday sent the following wire:

"Encase tea packets in neat, small, carpetbags."

In a statement issued last night, relative to his wire to the commissioner, Mullen said:

"I am confident that if the primary bill had passed Mr. Allen would not now be a delegate."

PoliceGuard Asked For 'Sunflower'

Philadelphia, June 23 (AP).—J. Henry Smythe, jr., called on the police to protect his Landon sunflower badge.

"I know this is a Democratic convention," he complained, "but I insist I have a right to wear what kind of badge I see fit."

Smythe was smarting over what he said was a Democratic attempt to destroy the sunflower in a hotel lobby early today.

They kept yelling that I was "getting in their hair," said Smythe, "so after getting my badge back I went to my room and went to bed."

He said he would demand a bodyguard if necessary.

"I am a fearless man," he said, "but a sensible one too. I'll keep wearing my badge throughout the convention, but I want a policeman, too."

Lehman to Cast Votes Of N. Y. for Roosevelt

Philadelphia, June 23 (AP).—Gov. Herbert H. Lehman, of New York, who made it clear yesterday that he was standing with the New Deal and not with his old friend Alfred E. Smith, will cast New York's 94 votes for the renomination of President Roosevelt.

The Governor was elected chairman of the New York delegation and as such will cast its votes.

Nominee Sees Dr. Coulter, Former Commissioner, on Farmer Tariffs.

By the Associated Press.

Topeka, Kans., June 23.—Gov. Alf M. Landon said today he "would be glad to have the support of everybody" when he was questioned at his press conference about reports that certain Eastern Democrats would support him in the Presidential campaign.

Dr. John Lee Coulter, Fargo, N. Dak., former member of the United States Tariff Commission, visited Landon, who said they discussed "agricultural tariffs."

"A balanced trade is as important as a balanced budget," Dr. Coulter declared, adding: "Each year for the last four years we have been exporting less agricultural products, and importing more, until last year imports exceeded exports more than $450,000,000."

He proposed enactment of "selective import-export treaties."

Versatile Fisherman.

Gov. Landon is a versatile fisherman—he uses either a rod for fly casting or a pole for "sinker" bobbing—but he won't use any worms for bait in Colorado.

The Presidential nominee learned to fish, like many another youngster, with a pole and line, and he still likes to watch a cork "go under." But for Colorado's famed brook trout he will use only the fancy flies, rod and reel.

"I have a couple of good rods," he said, "but I haven't had much time these days to wrap flies." A box of flies was presented to the Governor today.

Landon also is eager to read a few books, ride—and rest a lot.

Work Will Intrude.

But work will intrude into the rest of the Governor, who leaves for Estes Park tomorrow.

He will work on his speech accepting the Republican Presidential nomination at his formal notification here July 23. He will prepare his message to the special session of the Kansas Legislature meeting July 7, the day after his scheduled return, and he will receive a few visitors.

For the first time in many months he will have a chance to ride with Mrs. Landon. Riding is their favorite sport, but Mrs. Landon has not ridden for some time.

Smith Is Silent On Hamilton's Bid for Support

Landon's Manager Says He 'Would Be Tickled' If Rebel Took Stump.

By the Associated Press.

New York, June 23.—John D. M. Hamilton, Republican campaign manager and national chairman, said today he would be "tickled to death" if Alfred E. Smith stumped for Gov. Alf M. Landon, Republican nominee for President, but the former New York Governor continued his stony silence.

Smith and four other Democrats, including former Senator James Reed and former Gov. Joseph Ely, Sunday called on the Democratic convention delegates to put aside President Roosevelt.

"Mr. Smith has nothing to add to last Sunday's statement," his office said late today.

In Massachusetts Ely voiced a qualified willingness to speak for Landon.

Claims New York.

"On the basis of the information I learned at the meeting, there is no doubt but that we will carry New York State," Hamilton said.

The new Union party movement of Representative William Lemke, he commented, would cost the Democrats 6 to 9 votes for every Republican vote it attracted.

In response to the direct question as to whether Smith would speak for Landon, Hamilton replied:

"I think Gov. Smith is one of the finest Americans and the people of the country are entitled to hear his views."

Beyond My Depth.

To a question whether he believed Smith should be given a place in the Cabinet provided he aided Landon and the Kansan won, Hamilton replied:

"That's beyond my depth. That would be a matter up to Gov. Landon."

Hamilton, while saying emphatically the Landon forces had given no support, financial or otherwise, to the William Lemke third party movement, added with a grin, "on the other hand, such a movement is quite all right with us."

Cone Far Ahead In Florida Voting

Jacksonville, Fla., June 23 (AP).—Banker Fred P. Cone, of Lake City, led Judge Raleigh Petteway, of Tampa, by more than 24,000 votes tonight in their run-off race for the Democratic nomination for Governor of Florida.

Unofficial reports from 887 of the State's 1,322 precincts gave the north Florida man 102,936 votes to the south Floridian's 78,785.

Representative R. A. Green, of Starke, led Representative W. J. Sears, of Jacksonville, 8,162 to 5,558 in the race for the Second Congressional District nomination. The votes came from 97 of the district's 227 precincts. Green is the incumbent, but Sears was forced into the race when the Legislature abolished his job of Congressman at large.

Joe Hendricks, of Deland, had 15,739 votes to 12,578 for W. J. Steed, of Kissimmee, for the nomination in the new Fifth District. The vote from 105 of the 269 precincts was Hendricks, 6,834, and Steed, 5,809.

Platform Row Feared Over Townsendites

Philadelphia, June 23 (AP).—The potentialities of a Democratic platform conflict grew tonight with word that the Washington delegation had unanimously instructed its representative on the platform committee to ask the inclusion of a plank indorsing the Townsend plan and to bring in a minority report if the move is rejected.

The Montreux Conference.

The conference which opened at Montreux, Switzerland, last Monday, belongs almost in a class by itself so far as post-war international gatherings are concerned.

Most of these, and their number has been legion, have been concerned with ways and means of preserving the status quo established by the peace treaties. But now, practically for the first time since the end of the war, a conference is being held whose purpose it is to bring about treaty revision through peaceful negotiation.

This is not to say that all the nations taking part in the Montreux parley, or any considerable fraction of them, are particularly happy over the prospect that, as a result of the present meeting, Turkey will win the right to fortify the Dardanelles, the Bosporus and the Sea of Marmora.

A majority of them, certainly, would be happier if the demilitarized status of the Straits were maintained. Russia, for one, would probably prefer having the Straits kept open at all times so that, in the event of war, its Black Sea fleet would not be bottled up as it was during the world conflict. Great Britain, with its eye on the defense of the Suez Canal and its great interests in the eastern Mediterranean, is equally perturbed by the Turkish demand for a free hand with regard to the demilitarized zone. But neither power is at all prepared to oppose Turkey.

In Russia's case, in fact, the Turkish demand has met with enthusiastic approbation in order to prove to the Ankara government how fundamentally Russian policy has changed since the days of the Czar; how sincere is Moscow's friendship for the Turkish nation. And the other powers are moved to grant Turkey's wishes by the feeling that, if the status of the Straits is to be modified at all, it is far better to have such a change brought about through peaceful negotiation rather than as the result of the type of action employed by Hitler in the Rhineland.

But it would be taking much too simple a view of the matter to suppose that the Montreux conference will simply content itself with putting the seal of its approval on the Turkish plan.

The fact is the prospective fortification of the Straits only brings more sharply to the fore the larger problem of security in the Mediterranean. This problem has been acute ever since last summer when Great Britain moved a large number of warships into that sea and the belief arose that a keen struggle for dominance there was in the offing.

To be sure Anglo-Italian tensions have recently shown signs of subsiding. Great Britain has announced its readiness to lift sanctions, and Italy, for its part, has indicated its willingness to reach a modus vivendi with Great Britain in the Mediterranean. But it is significant that in the meantime the British government has made it clear that the defensive naval agreement it reached last winter with France, Turkey, Yugoslavia and Greece is to continue. For the smaller Mediterranean powers Italy's increased prestige as a result of its victory in East Africa is an ominous development in view of that nation's ill-concealed ambitions regarding "Mare Nostrum."

Note For Grooms.

Since time immemorial, June has been considered the bride's month. Relatives, dressmakers, florists and caterers—all have suggestions—but in the end, it's the bride's word that goes. Up to now, no one has questioned woman's inalienable right to have her wedding exactly as she desires it to be.

But, apparently, there is a limit to everything. And Manhattan dress suit renters feel that this has been reached when grooms cannot be attired without bringing fiancees along for the fitting. This feminine invasion is no small matter since tens of thousands of these by-the-hour suits are rented in New York City every year.

To sister-sufferers, it will be perfectly clear why the little woman wants to accompany her future meal ticket when he gets be-hatted and be-spatted for the Mendelssohn March. Men, it seems, are all too apt to take the first suit they try on when the next one may do a great deal more for them on the Barrymore side. And even if a certain shade of gray transforms him into a Gable, it might clash with the vision in white by his side.

Whether this is a man's affair which should be settled between men is still a moot question. But prospective grooms shouldn't object too strenuously to these co-operative shopping tours for tux and ties. They should wait until Christmas morning and see how much damage the wife can do all by herself.

The Keynote Speech.

In oratory and enthusiasm, the Democrats have an edge on the Republicans.

Although it suffered equally with Senator Steiwer's keynote address at Cleveland by being too long, the effort of Senator Barkley at Philadelphia last night was better composed, better delivered and better received than that of his Republican colleague. In making this invidious comparison, Mr. Barkley's former enthusiasm for economy and a balanced budget may be allowed to cancel out Mr. Steiwer's earlier sympathies for a number of New Deal measures. Keynoters, it seems, are partly chosen for their attested abilities to understand the other fellow's viewpoint.

On the score of political importance, indeed, Senator Barkley's address in some respects merits comparison with the magnificent speech delivered by Herbert Hoover at the Republican Convention. It did not approach the former President's oration in the content of its thought, in its scholarly values, or in the concentrated vigor of its message.

But the Senator from Kentucky succeeded in combining a fiery attack on the minority party with at least a plausible defense of the new theories of government into which the Administration is now seeking to lead the Nation. Where he missed fire, failure was due to that overexuberance which is about the only characteristic the Democratic Party has in common with that to which Mr. Barkley used to belong.

The most distinctive aspect of this keynote address, excluding for the moment its sour references to the Supreme Court, was its frank admission of the relatively small tangible achievements of the New Deal. Objectives, rather than accomplishments, were stressed. Progress under this Administration, said Senator Barkley, has been "slow but steady." The more abundant life is still elusive, but can be regarded as "within reach."

Taking the speech as a whole, it would clearly be overgenerous to attribute this new note of humility to any sudden modesty on the part of the Administration. The purpose, rather, was to show that only a fair start toward building a new society has been possible since March 4, 1933, and that to reap the fruit of labors which some regard as excessive, extension of the Roosevelt mandate is imperative. And if this extension is obtained, as Senator Barkley was frank to say at the outset, it will be used "to promote those primal and indispensable rights which outweigh all political formalism."

In simple English, which the Senator last night seldom deigned to use, this means simply that the New Deal refuses any longer to be bound by those Democratic traditions which so many Democratic leaders value highly. On the contrary, it proposes to employ the emotional technique of eighteenth century humanitarianism to fasten on this country an excessively modern twentieth century collectivism.

In no part of the keynote speech was this purpose more apparent than in that discussing the Supreme Court. Senator Barkley significantly omitted from his prepared manuscript a very thinly veiled reference to a supposed failure of the judiciary to fulfill its "national responsibility" as a branch of government. He did not, however, omit an indictment of conservative constitutional interpretation by the Supreme Court which showed very clearly, even without the suggestion of possible far-reaching amendment, that the keynoter vastly prefers a government of men to one of laws.

Beside that implication, Senator Barkley's thrusts at Republican blunders, some of them richly justified, sink into insignificance. Beside that implication, his glowing praise of New Deal accomplishments, some of them also richly justified, seem similarly secondary.

What was permanent, what was vital, what was significant in the keynote speech was its demand for a fundamental weakening of our Federal form of government, operating under a system of checks and balances to insure preservation of the controlled Democracy, which is America's historic contribution to political thought. Just because Mr. Barkley demanded radical alteration in that which Mr. Hoover, at Cleveland, insisted should be essentially preserved, the two speeches merit comparison, and very careful comparison.

As that sort of comparison is made, the basic issues in this campaign will become more clear to all.

Abolition Is The Remedy.

In a recent radio staff meeting, broadcast to give the public information about WPA policies, Administrator Hopkins stressed the importance of local determination of prevailing wage rates and local tests of the need of applicants for jobs. This significant shift of emphasis may have been intended to blunt the edge of the critical attacks that have been directed against the centralized Federal relief system and to ward off further attacks that are threatening. But whatever ulterior motives, if any, may have influenced Mr. Hopkins to take a stand in favor of greater local responsibility, it is hopeful that he is at last moving in that direction.

However, it would be a great mistake to assume that the waste and unavoidable administrative arbitrariness of a system of Federal relief like the WPA can be eliminated by simply increasing the discretionary authority of local administrators. If these officials are honest and capable, they can function more efficiently if they are permitted to exercise their judgment in the selection of men engaged on work relief projects. But if they are disposed to "play politics" with relief funds, greater freedom from Washington rule will simply lead to greater local abuses.

So long as we cling to a Federal system of work relief, moreover, it is essential that a very large measure of control should be exercised from Washington. In the first place, Congress has—quite properly—circumscribed the discretionary authority conferred upon the President by specifying the purposes for which the $1,425,000,000 work relief fund may be spent. This is a necessary precaution so long as relief money is being disbursed on a vast scale by Federal agencies. The practice of writing blank checks for the President to sign is a dangerous and irresponsible procedure which the country cannot afford to continue.

Nevertheless, these protective restrictions upon executive freedom of action inevitably interfere with the utilization of funds in ways that would provide the maximum amount of relief where it is most needed. Another evidence of the handicaps of a relief system like the WPA is afforded by provisions in the deficiency bill carrying the relief appropriation which specify that prevailing rates of pay in the locality shall be the standard for relief projects, and that bonus payments shall not be considered in determining the need of work relief applicants.

Under the circumstances, efforts to decentralize the WPA are at best subject to serious limitations. Furthermore, the present system is unsound in conception and hence should be abolished instead of being tinkered with in an ineffectual manner. Every dollar now spent by the WPA in creating jobs could be much more usefully employed under a decentralized relief system, which provided for Federal grants in aid to the States. Such assistance should be made contingent upon State adherence to certain minimum relief standards. But the chief responsibility for administering relief ought to be vested in the States and in local governmental units under State supervision. The amount of Federal aid could then be adapted to the taxable capacity and the actual needs of different parts of the country, with the result that a Federal relief dollar would go farther and relieve much more distress than a work relief dollar disbursed by the WPA.

The WPA is a failure both as a relief program and as an employment aid. It takes care of only part of the unemployed, leaving great numbers of unemployables, as well as persons for whom jobs cannot be found, on direct relief. In many cases, the States and localities are unwilling or unable to make adequate provisions for these cases, although their need may be greater than that of men on work relief projects.

The present makeshift arrangements with a highly centralized, politics-ridden Federal organization on the one side, and State and local agencies on the other, working independently to provide for the unemployed is wasteful of money and incompatible with attainment of a well-co-ordinated system of relief, insuring adequate provision for the destitute and preferential treatment for none. What is needed is co-operation of Federal, State and local authorities, with a view to placing funds where they are most needed and vesting primary responsibility for their utilization in local authorities acquainted with local needs.

Germany Refunds.

Those Americans who have been taught to believe that the success of governmental refunding operations is evidence of financial strength and unimpaired credit may be surprised to learn that Germany has announced the issue of another long-term consolidation loan, bringing the total of such offerings during the past year to the large sum of 3,300,000,000 marks. It must seem strange to the uninitiated that the Nazi government, which has been piling up a huge volume of short-term debt to finance armament programs and work relief, is in a position to refund these loans even at the relatively high rate of 4½ per cent.

However, Germany, like other countries, has mastered the secret of creating a sure market for government issues, regardless of the state of public confidence or the capital resources of the people. Indeed, it sometimes seems that the worse off a country is, and the more unsound its fiscal policies, the easier it becomes to float loans. The formula for success is comparatively simple: first, create a state of alarm which discourages private initiative or shackle industry by restrictive laws and decrees; then, call upon banks and fiduciary institutions to assume the debt burden of the government by investing idle funds.

The process of pumping government paper into German banks has been greatly assisted by numerous prohibitions upon the building of new industrial plants or extension of existing ones. The scarcity of foreign exchange, which has cut down imports of industrial raw materials, has further reduced private demands for new capital. With the market for new issues strictly controlled, and virtually monopolized by the government, idle funds have practically no place to go except into government issues. If a demand failed to materialize, moreover, it is well known that the government has means of compelling investment support.

All things considered, therefore, it is safe to guess that the German refunding loan will be readily subscribed, and the Nazi authorities will hail the success of the offering as a testimonial to the confidence which the people feel in the financial impregnability of their government.

The Two Managers.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Judging from the vitriolic attacks by the critics of Mr. Farley, one wonders whether it is he or Mr. Roosevelt who is the Presidential candidate on the Democratic ticket.

The attacks are either a sign of weakness on the part of his opponents or is a high tribute to his management of the campaign and his genius as an organizer.

I do not know Mr. Hamilton. He is new to the field of national politics. Hence, comparison with him would be futile. But, while I hold no brief for Mr. Farley, and feel that he is amply able to take care of himself, I must say, my mind involuntarily reverts to some of the political leaders of the past, such as Walter Brown, Will Hays, Matt Quay, Mark Hanna, William Vare, Boss Tweed and others that I might mention with whom I think he will compare very favorably. Politicians are not supposed to be angels or Sunday school superintendents and are wont to resort to every party trick that will promote the interest of their party and are seldom criticized by those who profit by their activities in their behalf.

Mr. Landon soon after his nomination, said he intended to conduct his campaign on a high plane; devoid of abuse or personalities, yet his manager, Mr. Hamilton, in his reply to Farley's criticism of the Republican platform, deviates from that rule. Not only is he very critical of Mr. Farley, but in effect accuses him of "political dishonesty and want of good faith," while ignoring and failing to reply to the accusations made by Mr. Farley. This may be smart politics, but is rather questionable in a man who is supposed to be making a reputation for fairness.

Low-Rent Housing.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The words of Secretary Ickes in dedicating a low-rent housing project for colored families last Saturday in New York, "a symbol of an attainable and more humane future," are fraught with politico-social significance.

I venture to surmise that this type of housing development for the betterment of urban slum dwellers now being undertaken by the Federal Government will eventually bring about long-range savings of incalculable value. To mention but a few of the ways that will add indirectly to the Nation's wealth, I stress the following: a decrease in appropriations for protection against criminal elements, a reduction in fire hazards, a lessening of the burdens carried by social welfare organizations and the public health service.

Each year this country pours millions of the taxpayer's money, not to mention blasted lives, down the sink of iniquity as a consequence of the overcrowding in squalid tenements in the blighted areas of our large cities.

It was not until the present Administration came into power that this grave issue was met by an effort to eradicate the conditions that are its cause. Of course, we know the cant stock-phrases of those who point a forbidding finger at the Constitution; but private capital is unwilling to enter the low-rent housing field under our system of building for profit, and most municipalities on the other hand are already saddled with debt.

Regardless of the outcome in November, the achievements realized up to now along these lines should not be allowed to fail through lack of Federal aid.

The Blue Ridge Parkway.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Your paper enjoys a large circulation in the Shenandoah Valley of Virginia. Your Virginia readers have a right to expect you to give a fair and impartial report of the proceedings of Congress. For some reason, which I am at a loss to understand, the report on Page 12 of your issue of June 21 headed, "Road Measure Passes House by Slim Margin," is the grossest misrepresentation of fact I have seen during the session of Congress just closed.

The bill in question was short and easily understood. The mountain drive now under construction will be partly in national parks and partly in national forests. The bill placed sole jurisdiction of the highway—to be designated "Blue Ridge Parkway"—for administrative purposes, under the Department of the Interior. The bill likewise provided that the Department of the Interior should have the right to maintain it. When the drive is completed, it will be Federal property. States do not have authority to maintain Federal property, hence the authorization of such maintenance in the bill. The bill carried not 1 cent of appropriation.

The news item you published stated:

That we jammed through a $48,000,000 bill for the construction of a parkway through Virginia and North Carolina. That was false.

That Secretary Ickes was present lobbying for the passage of the bill. That was false.

That the measure allows the Government to allot areas along the Blue Ridge Parkway to hot dog stands and small hotels. That was false.

That the parkway will be 800 feet wide. That was misleading. The constructed road will be only 30 feet wide; the fee simple title will be in only 200 feet. The remainder will be merely a scenic easement to preserve natural beauty and to prevent the erection of hot dog stands, unsightly road signs, etc.

That it was heatedly attacked by some Democrats. That was false.

I suggest that you read this bill and read the debate in the Congressional Record on it. When you do so, I believe you will feel inclined to express editorially to the people of Virginia and North Carolina your regret for the publication of the news item above referred to.

Effrontery To Washington.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Washingtonians are under bonds to unite and resist the tyranny of the small-town provincialisms and hillbilly politics with which the city has so long been afflicted. It is true that the public at large is enjoying the spectacle. Under the circumstances, mirth is pardonable. But there are sober second thoughts.

The city is being brought into disrepute throughout the Nation. The integrity of some of our basic institutions is being sacrificed to sterile egotism. And, most ironical of all, the ignorant fervor of this ill-considered opposition is doing more to swell the ranks of the Communists than their entire staff of professional organizers. They thrive upon it; they glory in it.

This childish maladministration of Washington affairs, this stupid and humiliating effrontery to Washington citizens, has long since reached the nuisance stage. The present would seem to be an opportune time to unite and obliterate the whole disgraceful, inefficient arrangement. That this, one of the world's great cities, should longer continue to be little more than a stage on which exhibitionists strut their silly stuff is unthinkable.

Plea To Mermaids.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Last summer at the Glen Echo pool a boy slipped and fell on a small puddle of oil which his mother had spilled from the lotion bottle with which she was smearing herself. Fortunately the boy didn't hurt himself but someone else may not be so lucky. This year I see the same condition existing. So won't you please publish this suggestion to the girls who just must use sun tan oil at public swimming pools:

Please don't do it. The oil floats in a thin film over the surface of the water which others have to swallow. It attaches itself to all bathing suits, which must be thoroughly scrubbed in hot water and soap before the oil comes off. Thoughtless young things spill the suntan oil on the concrete of the swimming pool while they are rubbing the oil in their tender skins and other bathers may slip on the oil and fall. So have a heart! And besides, the odor of the suntan oil is sickening.

Revival Of Cycling.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Thank you so much for the splendid article with so friendly a spirit appearing in today's Post about bicycling. The revival of this splendid, healthful sport is one of the most encouraging signs to be noted in America today.

The handicaps at present are the absolutely unsuitable clothing and very bad American machines made to resemble motorcycles, but at least a start is being made. My wife and I have ridden many thousands of miles in Europe across the Alps (twice) and Pyrenees with modern long-distance French touring machines—six speeds, shifting gears like cars, etc., and we know how to dress and all the knacks of the cyclotourist.

You are promoting an innocent, healthful sport and our compliments to the one who wrote the article.

Freedom Of Worship Today.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: May I express my appreciation of your editorial under date of June 19 on the subject, "Today Religion Is Free."

It is not easy to take a stand for a principle when to do so means the loss of a measure of popular approval, especially when one's financial interests are bound to a large degree in the approbation of those to whom an editor must look for support—namely, his readers and advertisers.

Therefore, you are to be commended in your position in the interest of the genuinely American principle of freedom to worship God according to the dictates of one's conscience. There is no intention on the part of these children to flout the flag. No insult is intended or committed here, but a simple and eloquent demonstration of their choice to recognize their God as alone worthy of obeisance or reverence. Any orderly citizen will on occasion display the flag and treat it with respect, but there is a limit to the degree of reverence and salutation that a Christian may render. The situation is similar to that of pagan Rome. Caesar was the emperor. He was deified and salvation was ascribed to him. He or his statue was saluted in manner similar to the salute to the flag. He was exalted, honored and saluted in like manner as the flag today is saluted.

We know what happened to those Christians who displeased Caesar and his cohorts by refusing to salute.

The Encyclopedia Americana says this about the flag: "The flag, like the cross, is sacred. Many persons employ the words, 'Etiquette of the flag.' This expression is too weak. The rules and regulations relative to human attitude towards national standards use strong, expressive words, as 'service to the flag,' 'reverence for the flag,' 'devotion to the flag.'"

Religion consists of the observance and practice of any ceremony or outward forms by which men attribute to some superior power, object or thing, protection or salvation. Shall religion be free? Your editorial on this subject is indeed refreshing.

Eternal vigilance must be exercised today as rights as embodied in the Constitution. To many thinking people there is a sinister movement on foot in America to gradually break down the rights of the individual to think and worship according to his own conscience.

As Others See Us

With funds from the Carnegie Corporation, the Institute of International Education invited Etienne Dennery, professor at the Ecole Libre des Sciences Politiques in Paris, to lecture at several Western colleges. Extracts from his report follow.

WHILE the landscapes of the Northwestern pairies bear a striking resemblance to one another, and the life of the farmers is also rather similar, nevertheless, even in the case of States as close together as Nebraska and South Dakota, I do not believe the diversity I noticed was an illusion. It seemed to me that distrust of European affairs in this region is more emphatic than in some other sections visited. But I believe it is caused by the eager desire for neutrality, and by a more difficult economic situation. The fact that distress is more acute among farmers growing wheat than among those cultivating maize, may perhaps account for the dislike they seem to feel toward distant lands.

* * * *

I discovered that in Western society there is nothing that resembles class difference. More than once, the waiter who served me in the coffee house, the girl who worked the lift in the hotel, the cashier, the driver, spoke to me of one of my lectures they had heard that very morning at the college where they were studying. This eagerness to go in for a life of study while following at the same time some occupation, often very humble, tends to develop among the young people a deep sense of responsibility. The life of the people in the Western region I visited is lived together. They have no tendency, like the inhabitants of more than one European country, to project their social divisions into the domain of foreign politics.

This youth with its ardent desire for social equality has not, on the contrary, the same passion for intellectual independence as has the youth of the democratic countries of Europe. The American student, while he realizes that he possesses liberty of thought, seems to have no great desire to avail himself of it. American youth has an enormous capacity for enthusiasm, but it bursts forth less easily than a Frenchman. A young Frenchman has an innate inclination to contradict; even when he really thinks just like everybody else, he does not like to admit it. A statement made regarding the Italo-Ethiopian conflict, or even of that between China and Japan, to a group of French students, will almost inevitably start a controversy. In American student clubs where I have spoken, many questions were asked me regarding facts, but only a few regarding tendencies. I very seldom found an audience divided into two parties. There again, it did not seem to be due to lack of interest but rather to intellectual timidity.

* * * *

The dominant influence upon the thinking of these college youths regarding foreign policy is, without any doubt, a horror of war. It is a common anxiety for one and all. The anxiety of farmers of the prairie was identical with what I had noted a few weeks before among our French peasants. The question were identical: "Do you really think we are going to have another war?" But there was this difference: The French know that in the event of another world war there is no possibility of their remaining outside the conflict, while the American still lives in the hope that his country may remain neutral.

The idea that important political conflicts are caused by the working of economic interests was strongly stamped upon the minds of the greater part of my hearers. I endeavored to explain that, in my opinion, the influences causing conflicts are very complex and of infinite variety; that nations in economic competition since the war in almost every part of the globe have yet maintained friendly relations.

Behind all this economic explanation of the cause of wars it is possible to discern another belief. The feeling is very widespread that the peoples of the world desire peace, but certain selfish groups think that war is to their own advantage. The cunning of the latter triumphs over the ingenuousness of the former. College students appeared to me to be profoundly imbued with the idea of the good-heartedness of the masses and of their pacific sentiment. Hostility toward a foreign power was nearly always aimed at the government of its leaders. The students felt that if the masses were led toward a catastrophe, it was the leaders alone who were responsible. The recent inquiry in the American Senate on the sale of armaments and the cause of the American entry into the World War only reinforced this deep conviction. Of all the questions asked me no other recurred so frequently as that of the influence of the arms industry on the policy of European countries. Such influence assuredly cannot be denied, but the problem is not a simple one. The real political aspect of conflicts in the Old World nearly always escapes young Americans. They have that rare happiness of not grasping deeply enough the influence of history. The struggle of one nationality against another in Central and Eastern Europe and the violence of territorial competition are absolutely foreign to them. The problems of Danubian Europe, for instance, do not seem to them any different than the conflicts over oil in the Caribbean.

Fair Enough

By Westbrook Pegler.

'Certain People.'

Philadelphia.

This orgy of noise, color and excitement, this wailing of motorcycle sirens and din of incoherent oratory beating on the nerves and emotions of the patriots, is actually the American method of selecting a ruler. These men and women, shoving and squirming through the hotel lobbies, leaning against the walls to ease their burning feet; these goggle-eyed, sweaty champion chasers and autograph hunters with the badges on them and the trick hats and mottoed sashes are the delegates. That raucous whoop from some unseen female with the voice of a Big Four engine, magnified 1,000 times by the infernal ingenuity of the radio, is a patriotic song inspiring Americans to perform their solemn duty.

And that tall, bland, bald gentleman, with the cud of chewing gum, is James A. Farley, of New York, who first felt the thrill of absolute power as chairman of the New York prize fight commission, and now finds himself more powerful than he ever dreamed of being. It must take Mr. Farley's breath away in his private moments to realize what a boss he has become. As chairman of the prize fight commission he enjoyed the obeisance of the little, snob-eared fighters who always took off their caps in his presence and fawned upon him for their legal rights. It was his first experience as dictator, and there is no doubt that he enjoyed it.

The wheel turns. It was Al Smith who appointed Mr. Farley to the prize fight commission, and today Mr. Farley reads Mr. Smith out of the Democratic Party with a contemptuous, patronizing sneer about "certain people, prominent in organizations like the Liberty League." A great Democrat, with a fine record of public service, caught in the awful crime of disloyalty to his gang, is cast out in an offhand statement by a man who brings to national power the same ethics that admitted three former convicts to the corners as seconds in a million-dollar fight in New York.

It may be that Mr. Smith has grown old, that he has fallen into bad political company, and that his selfish interest in his personal fortune colored his judgment in denouncing the New Deal. And certainly he showed a pathetic loss of his old political knack in the tactless manner in which he addressed himself to the convention. Nevertheless, it comes as a bit of a shock that Mr. Farley can lightly dismiss Al Smith as "people of this kind" and slur his "Americanism," then strike up the band and drown any thought of regret that might occur in a mass of delegates already hypnotized by noise.

Never was a convention as loud and thoughtless as this one is even before the gavel falls for the first session of the farce. One band quits and another breaks into sound with the crash of a railroad wreck. The loud-speakers enlarge the incredible din to a volume beyond imagining and hurl it from wall to wall of the downtown buildings. A white man in flannels and straw hat, swinging a malacca stick, marshals a band of Indians in paint and chicken feathers around the corner of the Bellevue-Stratford and leads them whooping and squaking into the crowded lobby. Any Democrat with a badge, it seems, is entitled to a motorcycle cop for an escort, and the piercing wail of the sirens is heard above the tumult. There are escorts even for the photographers rushing their plates to the office, and the city administration has turned to with the true circus spirit to assist in the ballyhoo.

The hall is something to shame the crude and frugal showmanship of the Republicans. It is a big hall, with two great tiers of seats above the main floor, and the platform and press section are solid and expensive. The seats are several inches wider than those which the Republicans occupied at Cleveland, no doubt a subtle appreciation of the fact that the Democrats have been expanding during the "three long years" mentioned in the song, and the shields of the 48 States are hung about the balcony in patriotic array.

In the cellar the Western Union and Postal, with their marvelous efficiency, have established enormous bureaus to handle the file of the journalists, and small placards over the wires mention Des Moines, Dallas, San Francisco, Boston and a hundred other cities.

* * * *

Mr. James Preston, of the archives in Washington, a tall, lanky man with a bang of hair and a cat-tail mustache, has charge of the press section. A man of unique talent is Mr. Preston. He went to Washington as a cub correspondent in the early '90s and became superintendent of the Senate press gallery in '96. He has known in his time thousands of statesmen and journalists. He has handled the press arrangements for 20 national conventions, a job which grows in magnitude and detail, and for a dozen national golf tournaments and two world series. They come and they go, but Mr. Preston seems younger than men who appeared in the galleries years after his arrival, and he has an amazing memory for faces and names and an amazing popularity among a temperamental craft in a job calling for the patience of a mother.

A thousand new pale yellow cabs have been put into service and add their squawks to the general din of the solemn ceremony of selecting the next President. Senator Joe Robinson steps out of one, and three cops clear the way up the Bellevue steps as the delegates gape and cheer and the senator lifts his hat. He might be a dead man politically today but for the death of Huey Long, who had promsied to knock him off, but he is no man to worry about something that might have happened.

among the rank and file of the delegates at the magnitude of the step which has been taken. But for two reasons this undercurrent of unrest is not likely to disturb the surface tranquillity of the convention very seriously.

Real Faith in President.

In the first place party discipline, strengthened by lavish patronage and the effects of New Deal spending, is unprecedentedly strong for any Democratic conclave. Those who are going to bolt the party will do so privately at the polls, not publicly in Philadelphia. And in the second place, most of the staff officers and company commanders have real faith that Franklin D. Roosevelt knows where he is going, and is going there in behalf of national rather than party welfare. There is much more than lip service in the applause which greets every public mention of the President's name.

The platform expressions of implicit faith in Mr. Roosevelt's leadership are in part designed for purposes of morale, which is admittedly more needed since the launching of Representative Lemke's Union Party and the defection of the Smith "Quintuplets." But off stage the expressions of admiration for the President are nearly as strong, though coupled with realistic criticism of steps now regarded as major tactical errors. Of these, the lighthearted alienation of business support is almost universally held to be the most serious.

Except for the absence of President and Mrs. Roosevelt, the hotel serving as convention headquarters is like a White House reception, so crowded is it with Administration stalwarts from Cabinet rank down. And nearly every leader who can be isolated for discussion maintains that course which the New Deal is following was foreordained by the circumstances of the times. Just for that reason they regret that what are called "tactless remarks" and "excesses of individual exhuberance" have given many business men the impression that the Administration is out to socialize the country from love of theory.

Will Not Compromise.

On the contrary, it is argued that, by and large, every policy now in force has been necessitated by the passing of laissez faire as a doctrine applicable to modern American conditions. To fight against progressive regulation of individual initiative by government, it is maintained, is to fight against the stars in their courses, with chaos as the only possible ultimate result. Whether or not this argument convinces those whose function is to report is immaterial. The point is that the party leadship believes it so sincerely as to be willing to risk political defeat rather than compromise on the position now being assumed.

And it is clear that the possibility of defeat is now in the minds of the Democratic strategists. There was, for Farley, a novel lack of assurance when he told the delegates this morning that "while the political skies seem fair for our party and our destined candidates, confidence in the outcome is not enough." The same defensive was clearly discernible in the keynote speech and is even emphasized in private discussions. The reason for this careful avoidance of overconfidence is only partly due to a general expectation that Gov. Landon is going to make a strong opposition candidate.

Will Alienate Many.

It is due even more to the obvious difficulty in which the Administration finds itself. A profound dislocation is threatened in converting a program originally called "emergency" into a permanent party philosophy, particularly when the change comes close to reversing the tenets which that party heretofore has upheld. And it is just because they definitely have cut their ties with the past that the Democrats are so disposed to be contemptuous of the inconsistencies which they claim to see in the platform adopted at Cleveland by their rivals. Obviously they must claim all that the virtue of frankness permits when they strike out along a centralizing line certain to alienate many more Democrats than the "Quintuplets" who already have raised the standard of revolt.

Farley predicted this morning that when the platform comes from the resolutions committee it "will be one to which they can commit themselves without laughing and can swallow without choking." The assertion drew very little applause and it may well have been intentional that he limited his forecast to the carefully selected resolutions committee, excluding the body of delegates.

Among the latter, it seems, there is likely to be quite a little choking, in some cases strong enough to threaten apoplexy in the course of repression. For certainly there are parts of the country in which not even favors past, present and anticipated will reconcile individual Democrats to change in the party outlook now in process.

Ready to Crack Down.

Of that, however, the leadership is taking its chance. And there is no doubt of the sincerity of conviction behind the decision of the Democratic chieftains to lessen the importance of State boundaries, to centralize power in Washington, to deepen old channels of government enterprise and dig new ones, and if necessary to crack down on those who oppose this trend away from a federal and towards a unitary form of government.

Nor is this sincerity fanatical. It is based on a reasoned belief that broad extension of governmental powers are necessary to cope with the problems of the day. And it is further believed that even if the Democratic Party should lose the coming election by taking this stand, it would return to power on this basis in 1940.

Wife Gave HisFight $30,000, Says Dill

Spokane, Wash., June 23 (AP).—Former Senator Clarence C. Dill (Democrat), of Washington, stated in a paper filed in superior court today that his wife, the former "General" Rosalie Gardner Jones, of New York, spent $30,000 to help elect him in 1938.

He made the statement in answer to Mrs. Dill's answer to his amended complaint in his divorce action against her. In the answer Mrs. Dill said she turned over to him "something over $40,000," which she asked returned with interest.

Dill denied she "turned over to plaintiff $40,000, or any other sums in excess of $35,000, all of which was voluntarily given by the defendant, and of which aproximately $30,000 was voluntarily contributed by her for the purpose of electing plaintiff United States Senator and paying expenses incidental to such election."

Trial of the suit was set for tomorrow, but reports were persistent at the courthouse that an agreement might be reached for a decree by default. Mrs. Dill has insisted she would fight the former Senator's efforts to obtain a divorce.

Dill charged cruelty and desertion.

Stephen Leacock

By William Lyon Phelps.

His Farewell.

One of the foremost humorists of the world is Stephen Leacock, professor of political economy at McGill University, Montreal; and as economics seems in these days to have a comic aspect, I, for one, am glad that he has retired from the professorship which he has held for so many years with distinctin, so that he may devote all his time to his own brand of humor, where he has no living rival.

* * * *

He has published works on political economy and stories containing original matter arousing side-splitting laughter. One day a well-meaning lady said to him that she supposed he dashed off these humorous pieces in the intervals of serious work, and he replied that just the contrary was true; any industrious drudge could write about exports and imports, but it took imagination and originality to write intentionally humorous books.

I am grateful to G. R. Gardiner, of Montreal, for sending me a copy of the Montreal Gazette for May 5, which contained a long and detailed account of Mr. Leacock's Farewell Address, given to a hilarious gathering of 150 old students.

On this occasion a set of 40 volumes of his published works was presented to McGill University by his former students. "To mark their recognition of his beneficent influence and as an affectionate tribute to his long and faithful service to the university and to mankind through his distinguished achievements in the world of letters."

* * * *

Mr. Leacock was in form. Responding to the gift, he said that he had "been given the choice of his own works or Shakespeare's. The decision, he thought, had been a wise one. After all, he had written more than Shakespeare. And his work was worth more. Shakespeare could be bought as cheaply as 15 cents a copy, while Leacock sold from a dollar up."

Exports in May Lead Imports By $9,932,000

By the Associated Press.

The Commerce Department reported yesterday that American exports exceeded imports in May for the first month since January. The export excess was $9,932,000.

Meanwhile President Roosevelt's budget estimates for this fiscal year stood only $20,000,000 short of fulfillment last night as the Treasury reported $298,505,823 in income taxes had been collected during the first 20 days of June.

Collections during this 20-day period compared with $242,688,776 in the same period of last year, representing an increase of 23 per cent.

Total May exports were placed at $201,042,000 in value against $192,110,000 of imports.

$3,292,000 Excess.

The May foreign trade compared with an excess of imports totaling $5,074,000 for May, 1935, when exports were $165,459,000 and imports $170,533,000.

For the five-month period ending with May, the United States had an import excess of $3,292,000. Total exports during that period amounted to $969,545,000, while imports were $972,837,000. In the same period of 1935 exports exceeded imports by $16,155,000, totaling $853,867,000, as compared with imports of $837,712,000.

Compared with May of last year, exports were 22 per cent and imports 12 per cent larger in value. For the first five months of this year compared with the corresponding period in 1935, exports gained 14 per cent and imports 16 per cent.

Collections Mount.

Increases in exports as compared with May, 1935, chiefly were distributed among non-metallic minerals, metals and manufactures, and machinery and vehicles.

—The President, in his revised budget estimate, forecast income tax receipts of $1,434,000,000 for the current year, which ends June 30. Yesterday's collections, as reported by Secretary Morgenthau, added to those received during the first 11 months, brought total collections through June 20 to $1,414,870,905.

Treasury officials said they were certain that the President's budget estimates would be surpassed by the end of the month. They added that the second-quarter payments, due every June 15, usually were delayed in reaching the Treasury because the checks must first be cleared through the various Federal Reserve banks.

Murder Prosecutor To Exhibit Snakes

Los Angeles, June 23 (AP).—Lethal and Lightning, a pair of rattlesnakes the State charges had much to do with the death of Mary James, were ordered brought into superior court as a jury was tentatively chosen today in the murder trial of Robert S. James.

Eight men and four women sat in the jury box after a day and a half of selecting. The prosecution seemed satisfied. Counsel for James appeared to be trying to place more women.

Prosecutors, who have declared the death penalty the only fit punishment for the red-haired barber accused of murder in the rattlesnake - drowning death of Mary, last of his many wives, questioned veniremen closely regarding their feelings toward capital punishment.

Deputy District Attorney Eugene Williams ordered Joe Houtenbrink, reptile exhibitor, to bring Lethal and Lightning into court.

They were the serpents, the State alleges, which James used as death instruments to remove Mary for her insurance. To make doubly certain of her demise, he drowned her in a bathtub, prosecutors charge.

U. S. Magazine Asia Barred by Chinese

Nanking, June 23 (AP).—The American magazine Asia was barred from circulating in China today by the foreign office, which declared the publication contained material unfavorable to the government.

New York, June 23 (AP).—An article in the May issue of Asia, in which Gen. Chiang Kai-Shek was described as the head of a secret Chinese political organization, was the reason the magazine was barred in China, a representative of the magazine said today.

The Chinese government, through its consul general in New York, denied the existence of such an organization and demanded a retraction, it was said at the magazine's office. The Asia spokesman said a letter of denial by Psune-Chi Yu, Chinese consul general, would be published in the July issue.

The article to which the Chinese government objected said Chiang's alleged secret group was known as the "Blue Shirts," and characterized it as a semi-terrorist organization, the Asia office said.

U. S. Maps Steps To Aid Drought Areas in West

Livestock Loans and Direct Relief Included in Program.

By the Associated Press.

A four-point program of emergency relief, coupled with expert study of land utilization and rural rehabilitation work, was mapped by Government officials yesterday to aid drought-stricken North Central States.

Senator Bulow (Democrat), of South Dakota, outlined an emergency program of WPA employment, livestock loans, and direct relief which he said had been agreed upon by the President and WPA Administrator Harry L. Hopkins after a conference with Senator Nye (Republican), of North Dakota; Gov. Welford of North Dakota, and Gov. Berry of South Dakota.

It was estimated that between $50,000,000 and $100,000,000 would be expended in giving Federal assistance in the North Central drought States.

WPA workers, Bulow said, will be employed in building farm to market roads at an average wage of $40 a month. A second WPA project will involve construction of small earth dams in connection with the soil conservation program. Small loans when needed will be advanced for the maintenance of livestock, and during the winter, needy families will be given direct Government relief.

Near the end of the week, three agricultural experts, selected by Rexford G. Tugwell, resettlement administrator, will leave Washington for a ten-day tour of the Dakotas and Montana to study needs for rehabilitating distressed families and investigate possibilities of a permanent land protection and development program in the drought area.

Those who will make the trip are W. W. Alexander, assistant rural resettlement administrator; Joseph L. Bailey, director of rural rehabilitation, and L. C. Gray, director of land utilization.

The Weather Bureau reported yesterday that present drought conditions in the North Central States were not quite as bad as in the great drought year of 1934. The weather has not been so hot, but throughout the entire area conditions were nevertheless described as extremely bad.

Rainfall in that area has been only about one-third of normal in the last two and a half months.

Spanish Town Levies Tax on Catholic Bells

Madrid, June 23 (AP).—Tolls on the tolling of church bells and levies on cassocks were decided upon by one Spanish town today as a means of "swelling revenues."

The village council of Casas Viejas, province of Valencia, notified the parish priest the scale on bells would be: Those announcing daily low mass, $3; Sunday high mass, $6; pontifical high mass, $30. Fees for bells announcing requiem masses ranging from $3 to $15, depending on whether the mass is low, solemn or high.

Levies of $3 were imposed on each appearance in public in a priest's cassock. Priests also must visit the town hall the day before delivering a sermon to outline it fully. Sermons considered to reflect on authorities are subject to fine.

Van Sweringen Rail Hearings Are Called Off

Magnate to Furnish Data in Writing; Wheeler Warns Against Evasion.

By the Associated Press.

Hearings to which O. P. Van Sweringen had been summoned for questioning on his railroad financing methods were canceled yesterday by Senator Wheeler (Democrat), of Montana, with the explanation that the financier had agreed to furnish in writing all information desired.

Wheeler, who made the announcement after conference with Van Sweringen's legal staff, headed by Herbert E. Fitzpatrick, said the cancellation of the appearance order was conditional upon strict adherence to the agreement. Wheeler is chairman of the committee named by the Senate to investigate railroad financing and banking affiliations.

"We are willing to try out the procedure (of obtaining data in writing) for a reasonable length of time to see whether it works satisfactorily," he said. "If our complaints are not cleared up and if any railroad or other organization undertakes to delay the committee or refuse us information we will subpena them down here and refer the matter to the district attorney."

About 25 railroad systems are under investigation by the committee.

Van Sweringen originally was to have taken the stand Monday. Instead he and counsel went into a series of conferences with Wheeler. The Senator finally announced the financier would be examined yesterday. Van Swerlingen and his counsel appeared but after a talk between the attorneys and Wheeler decision to waive the hearings was reached.

U. S. Security Act Target in N. J. Suit

Newark, N. J., June 23 (U.P.).—The constitutionality of the Federal social security act was attacked in an action brought today before Federal Judge Guy L. Fake on the grounds the act is class legislation, discriminatory and violates the "due process' clause of the Constitution.

Judge Fake, on application of the receivers of the Newark milk company, issued an order requiring Col. William H. Kelly, collector of internal revenue for northern New Jersey, to show cause on June 29 why he should not be restrained from collecting any tax from the plaintiffs for the purposes of the social security act.

WPA Follows Old Procedure On New Funds

Hopkins' Rules Changed But Slightly for Spending of $1,425,000,000.

By the Associated Press.

Redesignated by President Roosevelt as Works Progress Administrator, Harry L. Hopkins yesterday ordered the new $1,425,000,000 work relief appropriation to be spent in virtually the same manner as the old $4,000,000,000 fund.

Orders dispatched to all State WPA administrators immediately after his reappointment made few changes in existing regulations except to give the field staff some increased powers and to carry out two new policies outlined by Congress.

Continuing the requirement that 50 per cent of WPA workers be persons from relief rolls or persons certified as being in need of relief, Hopkins directed his field staff not to consider bonus payments in determining veterans' eligibility for jobs and to bar all aliens who entered this country illegally.

While Hopkins was getting the new WPA program under way, the Public Works Administration and Resettlement Administration awaited executive orders making available to them the $300,000,000 and the $85,500,000 provided for them, respectively, by the deficiency relief act signed yesterday by the President.

Deadline Omitted.

Hopkins' revised regulations, effective July 1, omitted the previous November 1 "deadline" requiring that a person must have been on relief on that date to be eligible for a WPA job.

The end of the fight over payment of prevailing wages, which last year held up the $4,000,000,000 appropriation for months, was written with the formal order today that prevailing hourly wages must be paid.

This, however, simply meant a reduction in working hours in those few instances where the prevailing wage was not already being paid, since the monthly wage scale of $19 to $94 was retained.

Prevailing wages had been restored by a reduction in working hours, and Hopkins continued his requirement that no person should be required to work more than 140 hours a month or 40 hours a week.

In another part of his order, Hopkins decreed that WPA workers no longer would be paid when bad weather or other conditions prevented them from working—although he directed that they be given every "reasonable opportunity" to make up the lost wages.

The WPA field staff, which has been given the responsibility of deciding which of the $4,000,000,000 in approved projects are to be carried out, was directed to determine the local prevailing hourly wage by consulting local and Federal agencies as well as representatives of labor and employers.

Hopkins also continued the regulations that only one member of a family could be employed, except for young people aided by the National Youth Administration, and that "except as specifically provided by law and by these regulations, workers who are qualified by training and experience to be assigned to work projects shall not be discriminated against on any grounds whatever, such as race, religion, or political affiliation."

Fund Division.

Under the work relief act, the $1,425,000,000 must be spent as follows (except for 15 per cent increases in allotments which are made with funds already on hand) on these projects: highways, roads and street construction, $813,250,000; public buildings, $156,750,000; parks and recreational facilities, $156,750,000; public utilities, $171,000,000; flood control, $128,250,000; white collar projects, $85,500,000; women's projects, $85,500,000; miscellaneous, $71,250,000; National Youth Administration, $71,250,000; rural rehabilitation, loans and relief to farmers (resettlement administration), $85,500,000.

In directing State administrators not to employ aliens illegally in this country, Hopkins ordered them to "make every reasonable effort consistent with prompt employment of the destitute unemployed to see that such aliens are not employed and that if employed and their status as such alien is disclosed they shall thereupon be discharged."

Japanese Push American Aside In War Parade

Army Captain Threatened With Bayonet by Tokyo Soldier.

By the Associated Press.

Peiping, June 23.—Japanese bayonets cleared the way for Peiping's mightiest martial display in nearly 40 years today—with a United States Army captain and other foreigners reported forced from the roads and sidewalks.

Chinese reports said Capt. Henry S. Jernigan, U. S. A., attached to the United States Embassy as a language student, was shoved from the roadway with a bayonet point against his stomach by a Japanese soldier.

Capt. Jernigan, a native of Hopkinsville, Ky., thrust the weapon aside and escaped injury, the reports said.

Other Americans and persons from abroad were said to have been pushed off the streets by bayonet-armed troops to make way for Japanese Nationals, gathered to witness the presentation of a regimental flag sent by Emperor Hirohito to the North China garrison.

3,000 Soldiers March.

With bugles blaring, Japanese soldiers estimated to number 3,000 marched through the streets, keeping Peiping in a state of excitement and expectancy.

Later they massed in a field owned by foreign embassies while their officers exhorted them to greater patriotism and more valorous deeds in the name of the emperor.

Chinese residents were patently irritated by the display. For the most part they remained conspicuously absent during the ceremonies.

Capt. Jernigan, dressed in mufti, was standing in the roadway watching the Japanese troops when the soldier, armed with a bayonet, pressed him back, ostensibly to keep the walk clear for Japanese.

Grasps Bayonet.

The American grasped the bayonet in both hands, it was reported, forcing it aside and calling the attention of a Chinese policeman to the incident.

Witnesses said the embarrassed policeman replied: "Citizen, you will save my face if you will move on quietly. I can do nothing with the Japanese."

The Jernigan incident was reported preceded by a similar affair involving the wife of a French officer attached to the French Embassy guard.

The French woman was walking along the curb of a sidewalk skirting the old Austrian legation quarter, where the Japanese maneuvers were held.

Persons at the scene said a Japanese soldier suddenly made a gesture toward her with a bayonet, presumably to frighten her away.

She refused to give ground, the eyewitnesses said, and the soldier thrust the bayonet in front of her 8-year-old son.

When the boy cried out in terror the soldier withdrew his bayonet, but shoved the mother into the muddy gutter, spectators related.

Throughout the ceremonies the Japanese soldiers were stationed at the entries of several embassies and legations, as well as midway between each block in the legation quarter.

Japan Declines Navy Bid.

Tokyo (Wednesday), June 24 (AP). The Japanese government refused an invitation today to adhere to the Tri-Power London Naval Treaty, signed March 25 by the United States, Great Britain, and France.

The cabinet decided an invitation by Great Britain to observe clauses of the treaty was inacceptable since the other powers rejected Japan's demands for parity, causing her withdrawal from the London conference.

Foreign Minister Hachiro Arita instructed Keinosuke Fujii, charge d'affaires in London, to inform the British Government of the decision.

A statement added the new treaty does not provide for quantitative (total tonnage) restriction and hence is "practically meaningless."

Mere Formality.

The rejection was considered here to be a mere formality, since it was a foregone conclusion the Japanese government would not recede from the position taken when her delegates walked out of the conference in January.

Admiral Osami Nagano, minister of the navy, it is understood, told the cabinet Japan must retain freedom from qualitative (tonnage in various categories) restrictions in order to build a fleet suited to her own defensive needs.

A naval authority, who was not identified, writing in the newspaper Yomiuri predicted Japan's nonadherence would seriously embarrass the United States, Great Britain and France in framing new naval programs, since the validity of portions of the London pact depends upon the adherence of Japan and Italy.

Washington and London, it was pointed out, would be anxious to determine how Japan would use her qualitative freedom in regard to capital ships and other craft before deciding their own programs.

Zioncheck Removed From Gallinger Hospital

On the domestic front, the cabinet moved to stamp out disorders arising from suppression of Nationalist leagues.

On the labor sector, a shipping strike which tied up Marseilles' harbor spread to Rouen, but the rash of provincial walkouts elsewhere seemed to be subsiding.

Because Col. Francois De La Rocque had contended the government's dissolution decrees disbanded only part of his Croix De Feu organization, the interior ministry issued three additional orders against the league.

The ministry announced the number of strikers now was cut to 194,000, a small decrease from yesterday.

The 6 per cent discount rate of the Bank of France, adopted to halt the rapid drain of gold to other shores, was lowered to 5 per cent to relieve pressure on business and industrial loans.

Minister Delbos' statement said France would examine the security "suggestions" made by Hitler at the time he remilitarized the Rhineland, with a view to a basis for agreement, but added:

"This agreement can only be reached if it responds to the principle of indivisible peace without a threat against anyone!"

France also will keep her defensive forces at the level of "immediate need," he added.

By eliminating the necessity for a unanimous decision in dealing with threats of war, the declaration continued, France proposes to bolster the League's stand against aggression.

Publication of armament figures, for which France was said to be preparing through nationalization of war industries, also was proposed.

Delbos said France would ask that a commission study the European union envisaged by Aristide Briand, would draw up a "balance sheet" on economic needs and remedies, and would brook no "crusade" against the regimes and authority of other nations, such as Germany and Italy.

In connection with the proposed western European grouping, he asserted an agreement on military aviation limitation was "highly desirable."

As for sanctions, the government's declaration stated:

"In the present state of things, the maintenance of sanctions would be only a symbolic gesture without real efficacy. What good is there in continuing measures, the character of which would become worse from the very fact we could not thereafter assign a definite object to them."

As for the United States, Delbos asserted:

"France counts beyond the Atlantic on the sympathy of American democracy, the natural friend of free nations."

He named Britain, Russia, Poland and the Little Entente as countries whose support is expected, and added: "We are convinced Italy will bring the support of her necessary co-operation."

In the chamber, Rightists objected heatedly to Communist applause every time the Soviet Union was mentioned. The Left, in turn, protested when Deputy Jean Montigny criticized the government's collective security policy.

Montigny's statement that foreign influence had brought pressure to bear on the French foreign policy was taken as a reference to Russia, and Minister Delbos' attempt to protest was drowned out in Rightist cries of "To Moscow! To Moscow!"

The Leftists banged their desks and jeered.

Minister of the Interior Roger Salengro meanwhile told the cabinet of "measures taken to maintain public order" which were not, however, made public.

The reduction in the rediscount rate, financiers said, was an attempt in part to make borrowing conditions easier for firms which must meet increased pay rolls as the result of strikers' victories.

The rate of 9 per cent for advances on gold was left unchanged to discourage hoarding. However, the rate on loans covered by securities was decreased from 8 to 6 per cent, and on 30-day loans from 6 to 5 per cent.

him, so he could "find out where they are taking me."

He charged hospital attendants with beating him until he had "bruises all over." When he reached the Sheppard and Enoch Pratt Hospital an hour later, he shouted at bystanders that he had been "kidnaped."

Accompanying Zioncheck on the trip was Dr. William H. McCullagh, assistant psychiatrist; Mrs. Josie M. Bastian, superintendent of nurses; Gieger and several hospital orderlies.

A statement, issued by Dr. Bocock a few minutes prior to the transfer, read:

"The examinations of Mr. Zioncheck have been completed and he is leaving Gallinger Municipal Hospital and will enter Sheppard and Enoch Pratt Hospital for further treatment."

Zioncheck, who has been confined to Gallinger for more than three weeks, was described as a "very sick man." Medical authorities agreed, however, that with proper treatment he will eventually "get better" and possibly be cured.

His condition was attributed by officials to a combination of overwork and drink.

License Loan Repaid.

Mrs. Marion A. Zioncheck yesterday had repaid Lawrence L. Merrill, deputy clerk of court at Annapolis, Md., $2 her husband borrowed to pay for their marriage license.

She squared the debt with Merrill Monday night after visiting the Rev. Paul R. Diehl, pastor of the Trinity Methodist Episcopal Church South. Mr. Diehl, who married the Zioncheckes April 28, said the visit was purely a "social call" and that the "arrangements" made at the time of the wedding had been satisfactory.

3 Nations Urge Turkish Straits Be Kept Open

By the United Press.

Montreux, Switzerland, June 23. Russia, France and Rumania tonight formed a common front to keep the Dardanelles Straits open to their fleets for the purpose of mutual assistance in case of war with Germany.

Joseph Paul-Boncour, French delegate, and M. C. Contzesco, Rumanian spokesman, supported Russian foreign Commissar Maxim Litvinoff's demand that warships be allowed to pass through the straits freely to execute decisions of the League of Nations.

Turkey, at whose request a conference of nine European powers was called to discuss its demands for refortification of the Dardanelles, is seeking permission to control the passage of all warships through the straits so that at no time will there be more than 28,000 tons of foreign vessels in the Black Sea. This limitation would exclude the Russian fleet.

Could Send Convoys.

In event the League named Germany the aggressor against any nation, France, under the Litvinoff plan, could send naval convoys into the Black Sea to protect shipments of Russian and Rumanian wheat and oil to France, Russian troop movements and shipments of French armaments and munitions to Russia and Rumania.

Italy intends to oppose fortification of the straits when she joins the conference after the League has formally lifted sanctions, it was reported.

All other conferees now admit in principle Turkey's right to fortify the Dardanelles, but Lord Stanhope, British delegate, significantly warned that Britain will accept actual fortification only if a new and satisfactory straits convention is concluded.

Commission Abolition.

One of the main points of friction is Turkey's desire to abolish the straits commission which now insures freedom of navigation. Britain, Bulgaria and Rumania feel that the commission must be maintained to prevent Turkey from delaying commercial cargoes and charging exorbitant fees for pilotage and towage.

This means that Britain may ultimately try to veto remilitarization of the straits unless the new convention allows outside powers to send substantial naval forces into the Black Sea.

The question of unrestricted passage is bound to lead to renewal of the 200-year-old Anglo-Russian struggle, with Britain seeking the right to send strong naval forces into the Back Sea and prohibiting Russia from sending her fleet into the Mediterranean. Russia seeks to dominate the Black Sea and insists on the right to send vessels into the Mediterranean.

Commons Vote Upholds Lifting Of Italian Bans

Refuses Censure, 384 to 170, After Labor Leader Attacks Baldwin.

By the Associated Press.

London, June 23.—The British government, ploughing through a biting opposition barrage, was upheld by the House of Commons tonight on its sharp about-face decision to lift sanctions from Italy.

After listening to laborite charges that the government had lowered British prestige and dealt a vital blow to the League by reversing its stand, the Commons rejected a motion of censure, 384 to 170.

The huge Conservative majority rallied to the support of Prime Minister Stanley Baldwin, who concluded foreign policy debate in which the cabinet was on the defensive.

Maj. Clement Attlee, leader of the Labor opposition, moved: 'By its lack of straightforward foreign policy, the government has lowered the prestige of this country, weakened the League of Nations, imperiled peace and forfeited the confidence of this house (Commons)."

Decision Is Defended.

Government supporters sent Home Secretary Sir John Simon into the debate to defend the decision to lift sanctions from Italy.

The purpose of sanctions ceased when Italy won the Ethiopian war, said Sir John, adding:

"* * * I am not prepared to see a single ship sunk, even in a successful naval battle in the cause of Ethiopia."

Outside of Parliament, Winston Churchill, frequent critic of the Baldwin administration, said British defenses had been neglected to "an extent surprising and astonishing," that the European situation was far worse than at the start of the World War and that Britain's position "is not nearly so good as it was then."

"There is no population with a position so precarious as that of our 45 millions gathered on this small island," he added.

Churchill said the nation was in a state of "political paralysis."

Realistic Sense.

Sir John, while agreeing the League of Nations had suffered a serious setback, said it was necessary to look at the situation in a realistic sense.

Attlee, taunting Prime Minister Baldwin, said: "While Waterloo was won on the playing fields of Eton, Ethiopia was lost on the playing fields of Harrow."

The prime minister was educated at Harrow School.

Baldwin's explanation of why oil sanctions were not taken against Italy (he told Commons Saturday the United States would not have co-operated) was described by Attlee as "a thoroughly mean attack on the United States."

Sir Archibald Sinclair, chairman of the Liberal Parliamentary Party, asserted the "betrayal of the League by the Hoare-Laval peace negotiations soured the sympathy of the United States and turned it into a cynical disillusionment."

Maj. Charles MacDonald, Spanish War Hero, Dies

The War Department was notified yesterday of the death of Maj. Charles E. MacDonald, 62, retired Army surgeon, in New York City Saturday.

A graduate of the College of the City of New York in 1896, he joined the army during the Spanish-American War. He received a silver star for gallantry in action against the Moros at Mindanao, in the Philippines, during the insurrection of the natives.

Ice Box Cakes Feature Post's Recipe Contest

Mrs. M. D. Watson Winner of First Prize; Mrs. Ann Bonny Second.

A REFRIGERATOR cake to suit every fancy was entered last week in The Post's contest for recipes for this type of dessert. Graham cracker roles and pineapple concoctions were among the most popular entries according to the number of recipes entered in favor of each, but neither of these favorites could be awarded a prize this week, because duplicates of each favorite were submitted.

First prize, $5, is awarded to Mrs. M. D. Watson, 4707 Connecticut avenue, Washington, D. C., for her recipe for English ice box cake. Second prize, $3, goes to Mrs. Ann Bonny, 1412 Twenty-eighth street northwest, for her recipe for marron refrigerator cake. The three remaining prizes of $1 each go to Mrs. Flora DeMott, 734 Gallatin street northwest, for her recipe for cheese cake, to Mrs. Edith Davis, 433 Kennedy street northwest, for her recipe for plum ice box cake, and to Miss Joyce Talbert, 1754 Massachusetts avenue northwest, for her recipe for bitter sweet pudding.

English Ice Box Cake.

Spread slices of sponge cake with raspberry jam. Use enough slices to cover bottom and sides of a shallow bowl and use a bowl with a flat bottom. Crumble about 2 dozen macaroons (almond or coconut) and put in center of sponge cake. Add to this ½ cup sherry wine. When wine has been absorbed cover the top with 1½ cups thick custard made as follows:

Yolks of 2 eggs
1 tablespoon flour
½ cup sugar
1¼ cups milk
½ teaspoon vanilla

Cook in a double boiler until thick, following the usual directions for cooked custard. Let cool.

Let the cake stand in the refrigerator for 6 or 8 hours before serving. Invert on platter and cover with whipped cream. Cut in wedges and serve.

Marron Refrigerator Cake.

2-3 cup butter
2 cups confectioner's sugar
4 eggs
1 wineglass sherry or proportionate quantity of sherry flavoring
½ cup of marrons preserved in vanilla
½ cup shredded salted almonds or pistachio nuts
18 almond macaroons
18 lady fingers
½ pint whipping cream
1 pound cottage cheese put through sieve
1 lemon, juice and rind
3 egg whites, beaten stiff
½ cup cold water
½ cup sugar
½ cup water
¼ teaspoon salt
1 cup cream, whipped stiff.

Soak gelatin in cold water for about five minutes. Cook slightly beten egg yolks, sugar and water for about three minutes and add softened gelatin; add the cottage cheese, which has been put through a sieve, lemon juice and rind, salt and let cool.

Top and Bottom of Cake.

½ cup butter, melted
2 cups corn flakes, crushed fine (or 2 cups Swieback)
4 tablespoons sugar
1 teaspoon cinnamon.

Mix all together and put half of mixture into spring form of torte pan. Fill with cheese mixture, sprinkling the rest of the crumb mixture over the top and place in refrigerator for one hour.

Plum Ice-Box Cake.

Soak a tablespoon of gelatin in ¼ cup cold water for 5 minutes. Place over hot water until same is dissolved. Remove from fire and add ¼ cup sugar, ½ tablespoon lemon juice and a pinch of salt. Fold in 1 cup stewed sweetened blue plums.

Cream together the butter and sugar. Separate the eggs, add yolks and beat. Add the sherry flavoring and fold in the egg whites beaten stiff.

Crumble about half a dozen of the macaroons, soak them in a small quantity of sherry for a few moments, but do not allow them to become soggy. Mix these, together with the marrons and the half cup of shredded salted almonds or pistachio nuts, into the cream filling of the cake.

Now line a spring mold or an ordinary cake pan with a hole in the center, or the large pan of your refrigerator freezing unit, with wax paper. Stand lady fingers up on end as a lining for the cake, and place a layer of macaroons—with convex surface face down—on the bottom of the mold. Place a layer of the filling, then a layer of the macaroons and lady fingers until three layers of filling have been made. Again cover with macaroons for a top (or bottom layer) and chill for 24 hours. Do not, however, put it in the freezing unit of your refrigerator.

Just before serving, turn the mold out on a plate, cover with whipped cream slightly flavored with almond to cut the sweetness, and sprinkle with shredded salted almonds or pistachio nuts.

Cheese Cake.

2 level tablespoons plain gelatin
3 egg yolks, slightly beaten

Place in the refrigerator until the mixture begins to thicken, then fold in three-fourths cup cream, whipped until stiff. Strips of sponge cake are used to line the bottom and sides of a small deep pan. Stale cake gives more satisfactory results than fresh cake. Put a layer of the plum mixture over the cake, then add another layer of the cake strips and alternate the filling and cake layers until all are used. Cake should form the top layer. Place in the refrigerator overnight to set.

Bitter Sweet Pudding.

Juice of 1 lemon
1 cup orange marmalade
1 cup cream, whipped stiff
2 tablespoons sugar
½-package vanilla wafers.

Beat the cream stiff with the sugar and add to the marmalade, into which the gin and lemon juice have been stirred. Arrange in layers with the wafers in stemmed glasses or in a large serving bowl, using wafers for the bottom layer. Cover with the cream mixture and chill overnight in the refrigerator. Serve with a garnish of rosettes of sweetened whipped cream and top with slices of candied orange peel.

A Two-Egg Cake With a Festive Appearance

Orange-coconut filling between two layers of fine-textured cake, swirls of seven-minute frosting covering top and sides and a garnish of shredded coconut and orange segments make this inexpensive cake a luxurious dessert that will appeal to summer appetites.

Cake With a Fruity Flavor Appeals to Summer Appetite

Inexpensive Two-Egg Pastry With Refreshing Orange and Coconut Filling Makes Delicious Dessert, or Accompaniment for Refreshments.

CAKE WITH A FRUITY flavor will appeal to summer appetites whether it is served for dessert at luncheon or dinner or as an accompaniment for punch after an afternoon or evening rubber of bridge.

The festive looking cake illustrated is merely an inexpensive two-egg cake decked in summer attire. A cool, refreshing orange-coconut filling rests between the two layers. The ever popular seven-minute frosting swirls about top and sides of the cake, and the tempting garnish combines orange segments and canned moist coconut. Both have been scattered on the frosting while it is still soft. The recipe follows:

Ambrosia Layer Cake.

2½ cups sifted cake flour
2¼ teaspoons double-acting baking powder
¼ teaspoon salt
1½ teaspoons grated lemon rind
1 tablespoon grated orange rind
½ cup butter or other shortening
1 cup sugar
2 eggs, well beaten
¾ cup milk
1 teaspoon vanilla

Sift flour once, measure, add baking powder and salt, and sift together three times. Add lemon and orange rind to butter and cream thoroughly; add sugar gradually, and cream together until light and fluffy. Add eggs and beat well. Add flour, alternately with milk, a small amount at a time, beating well after each addition until smooth. Add vanilla. Bake in two 9-inch greased layer pans in a moderate oven (375° F.) 25 to 30 minutes. Spread orange-coconut filling between layers and 7-minute frosting on top and sides of cake. Arrange section of 1 orange free from membrane on top of cake and sprinkle with 1 ounce of canned, moist coconut while frosting is still soft.

Orange Coconut Filling.

1 cup sugar
3 tablepoons cake flour
Dash of salt
½ cup orange juice
3 tablespoons lemon juice
4 tablespoons water
1 egg or 2 egg yolks, slightly beaten
2 teaspoons butter
1 tablespoon grated orange rind
1 ounce canned moist coconut

Combine sugar, flour and salt in top of double boiler; add fruit juice, water and egg, mixing thoroughly. Place over rapidly boiling water and cook 10 minutes, stirring constantly. Remove from boiling water; add butter, orange rind and coconut. Cool. Makes enough filling to spread between two 9-inch layers, or 15 by 10 inch sponge roll.

Olives in Salad Sauce.

Thousand Island and Russian dressings are so variable in composition that they are welcome adjuncts to the essential variety of summer salads. Finely chopped ripe olives offer exceptionally appetizing contrast and body to these dressings. Combine them with your selection of equally finely cut celery, radishes, cucumber, hard-cooked egg, pimento, onion, sweet pepper, et cetera, to make an individual variation of your own. Use the customary combination of mayonnaise and chili sauce or catsup as background.

London Proposes Largest Bureau of Women Bobbies

By the end of summer London will have more policewomen than any other city in the world. Plans recently have been made for increasing the corps from 69 to 142.

Applicants must be unmarried, between the ages of 24 and 35 years, and not less than 5 feet 4 inches in height. A Scotland Yard man recently described the ideal policewoman as follows:

"She must combine the tact of a Solomon with the astuteness of a detective; the physique of a man with the tenderness of a mother."

The women are trained in self-defense as well as in crime detection and social welfare work.

Recipes for Delicious Berry Preserves From Post Contest

WILL THERE BE gooseberry, currant and sour cherry jam on the shelves next winter? Will the call for strawberry, raspberry or blackberry preserves be answered when hot breads come to the table on a cold November day? Of course, is the answer, for if you watch The Post food pages next week, you will find recipes for just such delicious concoctions which have been tested by Washington housewives.

For The Post is conducting another recipe contest next week, the theme of which is jellies, conserves, jams and preserves made from seasonal fruits—strawberries, raspberries, blackberries, gooseberries, sour cherries and sweet, currants and rhubarb or any of their combinations. The season for making these delicacies is at hand, and the inexperienced housewife will appreciate these recipes when she starts out on her first batch of preserves.

Cash awards will be offered for the five best recipes submitted this week. First prize will be $5; second prize, $3, and the three remaining prizes, $1 each.

To enter the contest merely write out your favorite recipes for preparing jelly or preserves, conserve or jam from any of the above mentioned fruits, or from other fruits now at the height of their season. Mail your recipes to Dorothea Duncan in care of The Washington Post in time to reach this office not later than Saturday morning.

Militaristic Toys Encourage Warfare Believes Educator

Toy soldiers and machine guns should be banished from the nursery as a first step toward world peace, believes Katherine M. Reeves, assistant professor of the New York State College of Home Economics at Cornell University.

For warlike toys Miss Reeves would substitute farm animals and figures, barns, paddocks and fences, boats docks and cargoes automobiles, trucks and traffic signals—all toys that have a tie-up with the world's peaceful work. The Associated Press quotes her as follows:

"Education for peace should begin in the nursery with playthings that lend themselves to creative progressive use by children individually and in groups. The 'leading on' quality is what parents should look for in toys for children."

'Furnace' in Kitchen.

Now that oil-burning and gas-burning heating plants have been made compact, houses may be built without cellars and the heater may be placed in the kitchen quite satisfactorily.

Pleasant HOMES

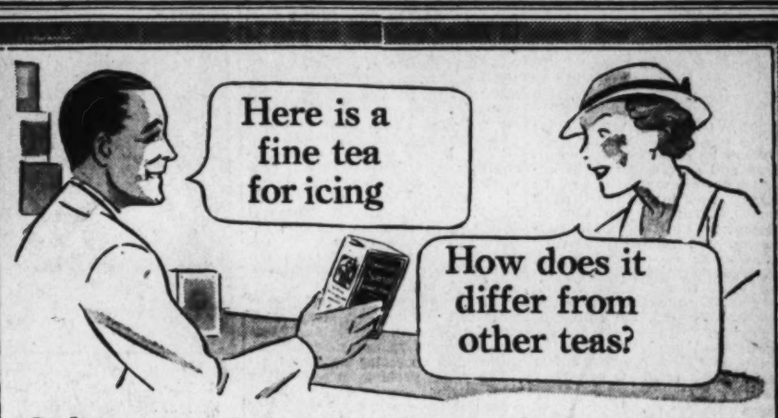
By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin.

WHEN a determined lady makes her mind up to have an attractive room for her little girl the chances are all to the good that she will do just that. Simply because she won't be satisfied with anything less.

Mrs. Matthew Leonard is in that mood right now. She is shopping for things for little Margaret's room. Her idea is to have powder-blue ceiling and palest yellow walls. With furniture painted powder blue . . . some oval rugs in slightly deeper shade of blue, curtains in pale yellow point d'esprit and bedspread to match—both made with deep full ruffles.

For decoration she is collecting pictures of all the different types of flowers, preferably botany prints, and these she will hang in blue painted frames. This will, besides being most decorative, be a perfectly grand way for Margaret to learn all the flowers by name and sight.

In this time type of room it is amusing and instructive to have progressive sets of pictures for decorations. When Margaret has quit paying much attention to flower prints her mother can take them down and put them away and hang up bird prints in their place. These can in turn be replaced by fruit or animal prints . . . then again the flower prints can go up. This way Margaret will keep interested in the pictures on the wall.



Salesman—Sanitary's special is a mixture of JAVA teas only. JAVA teas have a naturally heavy, full tea flavor and give a rich color to the brew and are very stimulating.

Customer—That seems to be a low price for tea.

Salesman—Yes, you can pay more for other blends of India and Ceylon teas. These teas are more delicate in flavor, but are usually without such a heavy body and are ideal for hot tea. But for icing Sanitary's Special JAVA tea has the right body to withstand the extreme temperatures to which it is subjected.

U. S. Entering Wonder Cycle, Kiwanians Told

Trains Will Travel 250 Miles Per Hour, Toledo Industrialist Says.

Trains that will travel 4½ miles a minute while their passengers are swimming or bowling to pass the time will be commonplace by 1961, a Toledo, Ohio, industrialist predicted yesterday before convening Kiwanians here.

The present generation, said Col. T. Russ Hill, is destined to witness a march of progress which "will surpass anything seen in the past 100 years."

Col. Hil lis president of the Aexair Corporation, of Detroit. He spoke at a fellwoship luncheon at the Hotel Mayflower.

Assuming th emantle of Jules Verne, nineteenth century novelist who foresaw rocket ships and high-speed transportation, Col. Hill reviewed the discoveries and inventions of the past century and then went on to say:

"Instead of the United States being all through on its development, you are now witnessing the beginning of this new cycle I am talking about.

"Railroad ties and rocks will be torn up. Solid concrete will be laid on the right of ways, curves will be taken out, grades eliminated, 200-pound steel will be laid in place of 70 and 90-pound steel. Deisel and electric motors will replace steam. Locomotives and trains will be constructed of composition alloys as light as a feather and as strong as granite."

Featuring movies, card rooms, swimming pools, bowling alleys and dancing salons, these trains will go 250 miles an hour as smoothly as an ocean liner on a calm sea, said Col. Hill.

Meanwhile, television and automatic transmission will be rendering present telephone equipment obsolete and engineers will be designing highways six times as wide as the ones now in use, the speaker continued. Roads of the next 25 years will be built on metal substructures, and following rain or snow, will be capable of drying themselves immediately.

"We must conclude," said Col. Hill, "that only a sucker will stand still and wail about the future of this country."

International good will was the topic taken by three speakers at the morning session in Constitution Hall.

Dr. John MacKay, principal of Manitoba College, Winnipeg, proposed the creation of a "League of American Nations." The friendliness which cements relations of the United States and Canada was hailed by Dr. John J. Tigert, president of the University of Florida, and Dr. Harry N. Holmes, of New York, a member of the League of Nations Association.

Wilson Eulogized.

Eulogizing former President Wilson as the formulator of "the greatest conception of the way of peace that ever emerged from the brain of man—the League of Nations," Dr. MacKay deplored the governmental systems of Germany, Italy and Russia with their "brutal tyrants shouting empty slogans to a deluded people."

"A League of American Nations," he said, "with full understanding and sympathy with the cause of peace, could demand a new league which would not be overshadowed by the fears and hates of European nations."

"While European powers are preparing for war and the Far East seethes with unrest, there is more of real goodwill and friendly neighborliness between Canada and the United States than ever before," said Dr. Tigert.

Dr. Holmes added his plea for peace and cited the exemplary relations of this country and the Dominion to the north.

Importance of the Kiwanis movement in community life was forcefully demonstrated in committee reports submitted yesterday at the international gathering being attended by 5,000 members and their families.

General athletics is being promoted by 723 rlubs in the United States and Canada. The program, undertaken for the benefit of employed men and women, includes baseball and tennis leagues, golf matches, rifle teams and swimming contests.

Seven hundred other clubs are building playgrounds and pools for swimming and wading for children of school and pre-school age. Hundreds of Kiwanis tourist camps stretching from coast to coast are open. Numerous clubs are conducting summer schools, health camps and chautauquas.

"Health and educational work, general charity, agricultural projects, and better citizenship programs were all active projects during the past year," stated Harper Gatton, international president, of Madisonville, Ky.

The following results were shown in a statistical survey of club work:

	Clubs engaged.
Assistance to underprivileged children	1,410
Agricultural projects	1,038
Aid to business and industry	1,108
Improvement civic conditions	1,664
Safety-first programs	628
Educational work	1,274
Music	703
Vocational guidance	642
General charity work	1,797
Juvenil work	1,288
Boy Scouts	927
Playground, recreation and athletics	1,423
Health, sanitation and hospitals	481
Citizenship	927
Patriotic endeavors	1,011
Government and allied projects	478
Churches	160

Extensive activities in the Capital Kiwanis District, which embraces Virginia, Deleware, Maryland and Washington, were reported by its governor, Dr. Lonsdale J. Roper, of Portsmouth, Va.

"Our clubs were never more active than at the present time," he said. "The 53 clubs in the Capital District completed hundreds of oommunity and welfare activities."

John F. Eastwood, of Los Angeles, chairman of the children's ocmmittee, advocated a broader program for assistance of underprivileged children, an activity in which 1,400 clubs are now engaged.

"The health work planned includes clinics, hospitalization, preventoriums, camps and the supply of clothing and food," Eastwood asserted. "For educational and moral development there is financial assistance, juvenile court work, establishment of classes for subnormal children, vocational assistance and boys' clubs.

"Moral and spiritual development will call for co-operation with churches, homes, schools and business concerns in teaching citizenship and in character building."

The youth problem is one of the most serious confronting Canada, delegates were told by Fred Field, of Vancouver, B. C., chairman of the international public affairs committee. Several thousand young men and women between the ages of 16 and 30 are unemployed, he declared.

Ben Dean, international publicity chairman, of Grand Rapids, Mich., lauded the cordial co-operation of the American and Canadian press as a vital factor in the rapid growth and influence of Kiwanis. A former city editor of the Grand Rapids Herald, he said:

"Day of Ballyhoo Gone."

"Kiwanis clubs expect the newspapers to print only real news and definite facts of interest to their readers. The day of ballyhoo, puffery, and circus stunts has long since passed.

"Busy civic leaders meeting once a week for fellowship and luncheon have no time for horse play. They expect the speaker to be someone with a knowledge of his subject and definite information to divulge. Leaders in State and national life value the opportunity of addressing as influential an audience as the business leaders represented in Kiwanis membership."

Ceremonies yesterday included the placing of a wreath on the Unknown Soldier's Tomb at Arlington by President Gatton and his acceptance of a "golden rule" from Dr. Roper.

Symbolizing the fellowship which motivated the interchange of visits among the 3,000 members of the 53 clubs in Virginia, Maryland, Delaware and Washington, the rule is a yard long and three inches wide and made of metal.

On the face of the rule is the Capital District emblem, an outline of the dome of the Capital over the seal of Kiwanis International. An inscription reads: "Travel with 'The Golden Rule' as a guide and your circle of enduring friendship will be greatly enlarged."

The inscribed signature is that of Edwin F. Hill, of Washington, a former district governor.

J. Edgar Hoover, director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, will speak at the third convention session in Constitution Hall this morning. At noon the Kiwanis and their wives will be received informally by President Roosevelt on the White House lawn.

George Washington Cherry Monument Given to Canadian

A miniature Washington Monument, fashioned of wood from a cherry tree grown on land where George Washington roamed as a boy, changed ownership last night in a Kiwanis ceremonial.

In behalf of the Capital district, of which he is governor, Dr. Lonsdale J. Roper presented the model to Robert J. Prittie, governor of the Western Canada district, at a fellowship dinner given the Canadian delegates at the Hotel Mayflower.

The dinner was one of several gatherings which preceded the reception to the international president and Mrs. Harper Gatton.

A scroll accompanying the gift reminds the recipients that the cherry tree from which the "monument" was produced may have been a scion of the one reportedly chopped down by Washington.

"There is no evidence herein to indicate that this statement is correct, but who knows?" according to the signers of the scroll, Dr. Roper and Asa W. Howard, secretary of the Capital district.

Pound Transfer Urged.

The District Commissioners yesterday adopted a recommendation of Health Officer George C. Ruhland that the District dog pound be placed directly under their charge rather than an agency of the Health Department.

Mrs. Ross Asks Women to Join Fight for Peace

Kiwanis Group Hears Plea for Home Campaign Against War.

Nellie Tayloe Ross, who was one of the first women Governors and whose present position is director of the mint, yesterday called upon women attending the twentieth annual convention of Kiwanis International to employ their greater economic and social freedom in the campaign against war.

She was one of the speakers at a ladyship luncheon at the Hotel Shoreham. Others were Mrs. Edmund F. Arras, of Columbus, Ohio, and Mrs. Custis Lee Hall, of Washington.

"Earnest - minded, intelligent women must see the service they can render to humanity by upholding the principle and teaching it to their children, that an attitude of 'live and let live,' of respect for the rights and aspirations of others, is a moral obligation resting upon nations in their relationships, as well as among individuals," Mrs. Ross said.

She predicted that the road to mutual understanding will be smoothed by two comparatively recent developments, namely, scientific advances in travel and communication and the growing participation of women in the affairs of humankind.

"Women abhor war and always have," she said, "but now, as never before, they can make that abhorrence articulate through numerous channels, as individuals and groups. The day has arrived when the opinion of the women, who after all compose half of the citizenry, is a mighty force to be reckoned with by leaders in the world of affairs."

From infancy children should be taught the misery that accompanies armed conflict, said Mrs. Ross. Makers of toy soldiers should include not only the gaily caparisoned volunteers marching off to battle, but also the one-legged, the armless and the blind returning from the front, argued the mint director.

Kiwanis' objectives were held up as a boon to youth by Mrs. Arras. The achievements of the Washington club in aiding underprivileged children over a 12-year period were reviewed by Mrs. Hall.

Ohio Guard Slain In Strike Battle

By the Associated Press.

Portsmouth, Ohio, June 23.—Strike battle bullets killed a guard and wounded four other men today in a clash between strikers and company guards at the closed Wheeling Steel Corporation plant in nearby New Boston.

More than 300 shots were fired when company guards attempted to transport food on a locomotive and gondola to workers besieged inside the company's wire mill since the strike began on May 22.

The slain man was George Meyers, 38, one of eight guards aboard the locomotive when it started down a three-block line from the main plant to the wire mil. He was shot through the chest with a .30-30 rifle bullet.

Welfare Unit Heads Renamed at Session

All officers of the Board of Public Welfare were re-elected yesterday afternoon.

The officers are Frederick W. McReynolds, chairman; Former Judge M. M. Doyle, vice chairman, and Mrs. Charles Goldsmith, secretary-treasurer.

W. W. Spaid, recently reappointed for a six-year term, was sworn in. Other reappointments, Dr. Frederick W. Perkins and Mrs. Spencer Gordon, had taken the oath previously.

following income tax evasion conviction in May of 1932, and at Alcatraz, to which he was transferred in September, 1934, Capone has been widely publicized as a "model" prisoner.

Lately, however, there have been persistent rumors that the former gang overlord's good conduct rating was resented by the prison's convict population.

Reports of his fighting with prisoners have been numerous. One of them emanating from the bleak, escape-proof lockup the Federal Government maintains for its most hardened criminals, was that Capone was knocked down last June 4 by Harmon D. Waley, one of the Weyerhaeuser kidnapers because Capone called hm a "baby snatcher."

In March, 1935, Capone reportedly was sent to solitary for three weeks for striking another prisoner who swung back and broke his wrist against Capone's skull.

Capone declined to participate in the bloodless strike against work at Alcatraz last January, and, according to grapevine rumors, the resentment of his fellow prisoners flared into such hatred that one prisoner was said to have hurled an iron weight at Capone, missing his head by inches.

The strike was in protest against rigid prison discipline and since then Capone has been assigned to the prison library and given other "protected" jobs.

Capone's sentence was for ten years. He has a year to serve on another conviction, according to Department of Justice records. Nevertheless, Capone reportedly has instructed his attorneys in Chicago to purchase from profits of the Chicago rackets a villa in Italy, where he is looking forward to retirement following his release.

An appeal for parole was denied Capone last week. Failing to win parole on a future plea, his next hope for freedom will be expiration of his minimum term on January 19, 1939.

Karpis Denies Kidnap Charge At Arraignment

Alleged Ringleader of Mob Fights Hamm Case in St. Paul.

By the Associated Press.

St. Paul, June 23.—Alvin Karpis, alleged ringleader of the Barker-Karpis mob blamed for a series of killings, bank robberies and kidnapings, moved today to fight charges that he engineered the $100,000 abduction of William Hamm, jr., brewery head.

Arraigned on a revamped indictment returned by a recent Federal grand jury, Karpis and two alleged confederates pleaded innocent to charges of conspiracy and participation in the actual kidnaping. They were ordered to trial July 14.

His co-defendants were Charles ("Big Fitz") Fitzgerald, accused of seizing Hamm, and John ("Jack") Peifer, St. Paul night club operator named by Federal agents as the "finger man" in the seizure.

Of four others indicted with the trio, one probably will stand trial at the same time. He was Edmund Bartholmey, former postmaster at Bensenville, Ill., in whose home Hamm allegedly was held prisoner four days. Although he pleaded innocent when arraigned previously, Bartholmey waived immunity and appeared before the grand jury.

Byron Bolton, who pleaded guilty as a participant in the $200,000 kidnaping of Edward G. Bremer, St. Paul banker, also will plead guilty, District Attorney Sullivan said, to the Hamm kidnaping charges and appears as a Government witness.

There's a tremendous difference between gins

NEVER OUT OF LINE
Gin ingredients vary in flavor strength from month to month, according to soil and sunlight. Hiram Walker's Controlled Condensation process measures and compensates for such variations in each distillation formula. That's why Hiram Walker's Gin always tastes the same.

MAN, WHAT A DIFFERENCE! between old-fashioned and modern methods of distilling—and between various brands of gin. You certainly can taste the finer flavor in Hiram Walker's Gin, the only gin in the world distilled by the Controlled Condensation process.

NO BIGGER THAN A TEN-GALLON HAT is the miniature gin still which Hiram Walker uses for a test run before distilling each run of gin. The double-check by test run in the "pilot" still insures the flavor being completely right.

FROM THE LAND OF SAND AND SULTANS and from four continents Hiram Walker gathers gin ingredients. Hiram Walker makes it a point to distill its gin from the actual fruits, herbs and berries—together with 100% grain spirits.

"This emblem told me the house was open 'til 9 P. M."

We've been looking at some houses lately. Sometimes we run across an ad in the paper that looks as if the house was made to order for us. Yet, we have hesitated to drive out and see it for we couldn't tell from the ad whether the house was open for inspection or not. But now, through these little clock emblems in The Post's Classified Real Estate Ads, I can tell in an eye's flash whether the house is open for inspection till 9 P. M. or whether I should phone for an appointment. A clever idea, I think. I don't have much time to look at houses and so I look to these clock emblems to save me time and energy.

Jack-of-Trade Pinkard Reigns At Dude Ranch

By Chanticleer.

Johnny Pinkard comes to the fore at the Dude Ranch this week as the jack-of-all-trades, what with neatly serving as master of ceremonies, playing the accordion and singing. In his spare moments he leads the band. One of Pinkard's fast ones: "This accordion of mine is just like a woman; you have to squeeze all the air of it before it will shut up!" Beverly Lee, of the Richmond after-dark Lees, is featured on the floor this week in a tap and truck routine. And sings surprisingly well, considering she is billed as a dancer and has an uncommon lot of good looks. Ruth Brown dutsts off the finale with a military tap dance.

Downtown, too, there are a few things going on. F'instance, the Mayfair Cafe of All Nations introduces a new entertainment feature next Monday when Mildred Bodee and West Warren journey down from Manhattan's Greenwich Village to open what may be an extended engagement. They've been at Jimmy Kelly's in the village for nine months and are used to long dates. Roy Kiser goes to Cleveland at the end of this week, Jack Campbell remains at the Mayfair.

Now they have a band within a band at Chevy Chase Lake, where Lee Field and his orchestra make music for the younger set in the wide open spaces. The instruments for this inner circle swing unit consist of iron pipes, boxes, drum sticks and other odds and ends of noise makers. They do such things as "China Boy" and "Bugle Blues."

The gentleman who juggles statistics is at it again. He reports that if all the Tom Collinses consumed at the Hamilton's Rainbow Room these warm days were poured end to end, and stood on end, they would extend 200 feet higher than the Washington Monument. About 1,500 daily, as it were.

Speaking of Tom Collins, the Embassy Tap Room challenges all mixers to a longer, cooler one than the one they dispense.

Brinkley's, the Southeast Washington rendezvous, says the hot weather merely means that the natives go to Brinkley's and meet their friends there.

La Venta, new Spanish gathering spot, is decorated with murals telling the story of Don Quixote. Interesting, and a bit on the grotesque side.

The Lotus is drawing in the citizenry these torrid days because of a big sign outside saying "Air cooled"—and because the cooling plant doesn't shoot cold breezes down your neck. Floor attraction this week is Cunningham and Clements, musical comedy favorites from George White Scandals.

They do say that when you have one of those Russian treats at the Russian Roof, you talk about it. Those three chefs in charge of French, Russian and American fares are masters of food preparation.

Skies that suddenly turn agin yuh and precipitate gently need cause you no trouble at the shoreham. The Shoreham's ballroom has been air-cooled and all you have to do in future is move inside from the Terrace. Barbara Belmore is featured this week in a peacock parade. Lots of fans and feathers.

Tastily prepared chicken dinners is usually the order of things at Griffith Farms. But you can get a hunger-satisfying steak, just as easily.

For the third time in a single season, the Royal Duo gets top billing at La Paree. They're literally skating marvels. Merton and Merrick are seen in a Rogers-Astaire routine and Virginia Dunworth taps all over the place.

Ben Alley, who not so long ago was heard by Columbia network audiences in the Slumber Hour, with organist Ann Leaf, is at Maryland Club Gardens this week. Brings with him Erma Lane, who dances. And tonight will be an occasion, for Maestro Harris is to be presented with a brand-new bandstand.

Helen Malcolm is the little miss, who sings and plays for the Cocoanut Grove customers, while Pete Moss and his orchestra are resting between groups. She has her miniature piano wheeled right up to your table and sings what you ask for.

Pete Macias will tell you about his new police dog at practically the drop of a hat. The dog swam out to Maestro Pete's house boat and decided to stay. There's a good story back of his trying to teach the dog tricks, but you can get that from the Powhatan's band leader direct. Just any night at the Powhatan Roof.

The Federal Diary

By Betty Read.

"Tugwelltown," as the Greenbelt low-cost housing project is most familiarly known, is about ready to look over its first applicants for homes.

And, despite the fact the model housing community is a Government project, Government employes will have to take their chances of being accepted along with everyone else. It has been generally understood that Government workers would be given preference when the time came to select the families to live in the little houses that have been built according to specifications which make them model dwellings.

This word came yesterday from the management division of the Resettlement Administration, in charge of tenant selection. And the qualifications are going to bar some people who have indicated their interest in the little community on the edge of the city where the old-fashioned community spirit of all-for-one and one-for-all will be fostered. Several thousand inquiries have been received and to those people and others who ask for it, an application blank will be sent.

These will call for very little information other than some assurance of financial stability in the low salary class and the size of the applicant's family. Then the eligibles will be weeded out and asked to appear for a personal interview. From these interviews, family life in the community will be built.

The standards of selection will be those that make a model housing project workable.

Although the building end of the project is coming along at a good rate, officials of the RA said, the houses will not be ready for occupancy until the late autumn for, in addition to the homes, the other features of the community must be developed before the project can operate. For instance, school facilities must be provided and the negotiations with the Board of Education must be ready and all the network of the idea worked out entirely before it is to be opened to the public seeking new homes.

Gardens, 50 feet square, where enthusiastic home makers can get out with their spades and seed catalogues, are still to be laid out and all such details will take considerable time to complete.

Agriculturists Hear Experts.

Three of Uncle Sam's crack experts on phases of scientific agriculture are headliners at the annual convention of the American Society of Agricultural Engineers, which opened this week in Estes Park, Colo.

Mae A. Schnurr, assistant to the commissioner and chief of the public relations division of the Bureau of Reclamation, will speak tomorrow by special invitation of the society and with the special interest of the heads of the Interior Department, in which department the Bureau is connected. She will represent the department in its tribute to the late Dr. Elwood Mead, who was her chief for many years. Miss Schnurr, an employe for 20 years in the department, was made an honorary member of the society several years ago in recognition of her outstanding work along this line.

The two other Federal employes on the program to address the 1,500 delegates are Lewis A. Jones, chief of the division of drainage in the United States Bureau of Agricultural Engineering, and G. A. Cummings, one of the experts under him. Jones will speak today on the need of constructive research work to solve specific problems of farm drainage and Cummings will talk tomorrow on the ways fertilizers can be used to increase crop production.

Davisson Retired.

Huston E. Davisson of the Internal Revenue office took a swanky now gold wrist watch home with him the other night. It was a gift from his fellow workers and the occasion of its presentation was the completion of his Government service. After 16½ years in the bureau, he was retired by operation of the law which required the retirement of those who reach the age of 70. There was quite a ceremony at the presentation and a speech was made by Col. H. B. Robinson, head of the aduit review division of which Davisson was associate reviewer.

For 12 years before he came to Washington Davisson was doing accountant's work with a large New York bank, and during his first years with the bureau he specialized in personal service cases. In 1923 he became a senior confere in the corporation audit division, in 1927 a conferee with the special advisory committee and in 1933 was transferred to the audit reivew division, where he remained until his retirement.

Dr. Frank H. H. Roberts, jr., the enthusiastic searcher after the mysterious Folsom man, the earliest known human inhabitant in North America, has established headquarters in Colorado for the third consecutive summer. He is one of the best known archeologists of the Smithsonian Institution and, although he has found in past years a peculiar type of arrow or spearhead which was used to slay now extinct animals, he is hoping that some skeletal material of the long deceased Mr. Folsom will reward his excavations. Although Dr. Roberts has found a great variety of crude art from that period, and the bones of an extinct variety of bison, he has not yet recovered any human bones which might give anthropologists even a hint about what Mr. Folsom was like as a person.

The Recreation Association of the National Labor Relations Board will hold its election on Friday. The group ballotted during an entire day last week for nomination, and the slate to be presented Friday includes three competitors for the presidency. They are Irving Hebling, Ada Gunderson, the incumbent, and Gertrude Davidoff; vice president, Herbert Glaser and Meta Phillips; second vice president, Margaret Clark and Louis Wolberg; secretary, Meta Phillips; treasurer Ben Frank.

The term of office is six months and the constitution provides that the presidency and vice presidency must be held by members of the opposite sex. The secretary must be a woman. On July 10 a special meeting will be held for the induction of officers.

V. F. W. Adding One Post a Day, Leader Asserts

Van Zandt Denies Loss in Membership After Bonus Passage.

James E. Van Zandt, national commander of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, last night told delegates to the seventeenth annual encampment of the District department that their organization was establishing new posts at the rate of one a day.

This growth, he said, was a clear repudiation of charges the V. F. W. would lose membership once the bonus bill was passed. He urged the delegates to contribute to a "war chest trust fund" being established to help fight for passage of veteran welfare bills.

Van Zandt said that as a result of a recent good-will trip he made to Japan he was convinced the Japanese had no ill intentions toward this country.

Last night's meeting was held in Thomson School. Most of the meeting was devoted to reports of officers and committees.

The three-day encampment, which began with a parade Monday night, closes tomorrow night with election and installation of officers and a speech by the new department commander.

On the Air Today

American radio will set the pace next fall in a series of international broadcasts in the interests of world peace. The first program, to be heard and presented jointly through facilities of the Columbia Broadcasting system and the National Broadcasting Co., will be short-waved throughout the world. The date, specifically, is September 20.

Announcements will be made in English, German and French. The program itself will probe into the sources of native American music, including Indian themes, Negro spirituals, cowboy ballads, mountaineer folk music and Southern folk songs.

The second concert of the series will originate from the Argetnine Tango Congress in Buenos Aires, February, 1937. The third will come either from the Dutch East Indies or the Belgian Congo.

Leo Reisman, who conducts the band for that show emphasizing the talents of radio's miniature "Johnny," observes a birthday on the air this week. Somehow or other I always associate 1922 in my mind as the year in which "firsts" were inaugurated in broadcasting. But Maestro Reisman made his orchestral debut in 1921, at WJZ—and was the second band to air a complete musical program.

Two special broadcasts of interest today from Philadelphia: At 9:15 a. m., a memorial breakfast in honor of William Jennings Bryan (WMAL). Michael Francis Doyle, attorney, will preside. Speakers will include Josephus Daniels, Ambassador to Mexico; Secretary of State Hull, and Senator Elmer Thomas, of Oklahoma.

At 6 p. m.: Commissioner George Allen will talk on developments in connection with the proposed plank for a District of Columbia vote (WJSV) through the use of a special line to Washington. Allen's Sioux Indians are creating a mild sensation at the convention, WJSV reports. John B. Colpoys, head of the District of Columbia delegation at Philadelphia, will be heard, too.

Special today:

Lily Pons: Sings "Bell Song," from "Lakme," contrasted with Andre Kostelanetz and orchestra in "Dodging a Divorce," WJSV, at 8.

Eddie Duchin and orchestra: Heard for first time, replacing Jacques Renard and orchestra, with Burns and Allen, WJSV, at 7:30. More about Gracie's "Housewives' Union."

"Gang Busters:" At 8:30 tonight, WJSV moving up half an hour to make way for convention.

"Lavender and Old Lace:" Begins third radio year in presenting Frank Munn and Lucy Monroe, with Gus Haenschen and his orchestra, WMAL, at 7:30. Anniversary numbers: "I'm in the Mood for Love," "Then You'll Remember Me" and "Here's to Romance."

Sylvia: The "singing goose," scheduled two weeks ago, makes appearance in Fred Allen's final broadcast, WRC, at 8 (Stoopnagle and Budd take over "Town Hall Tonight," beginning next week, for the summer.)

• • • •

Gracie Allen, when asked if she would run for President (on her Housewives' Union ticket), stated: "No, but I could certainly run for Clark Gable!"

Jelly Roll Morton, leader of that little group of musicians who gave us the earliest days of "hot" music many, many years ago, has moved to Washington and is being presented nightly at WOL. Exact times of his appearance cannot be given in advance because of convention broadcasts. Tonight his spot is 7:30, however. Next week he takes over a regular program in which the early history of "hot music" is recounted. WOL believes his ability at the piano and his knowledge of music will make him a local sensation.

Culbertson on Bridge

Close Penalty Doubles.

In either making or leaving in a penalty double careful consideration of partner's bridge mentality is vital. If you are considering doubling you must not only appraise partner's previous bids or passes from the viewpoint of dependability, but also must gauge his defending ability, which includes the opening lead if it must be made by him. Patently, close doubles are absurd wih a partner who is apt to drop from one to three tricks in the play, and especially against a declarer who, you know, will get every ounce out of the cards.

If the question is whether or not to leave in a double made by your partner, the problem is simpler but none the less existent. You may know partner to be a "hair trigger doubler." In that case, if a bid or a raise that you have made, and on which he probably is depending, was based on anemic values, it is merely self-protection to take the double out. In today's hand a vulnerable game was conceded by South's failure to follow this safety first policy.

North, dealer.
Both sides vulnerable.

The bidding:

North	East	South	West
1 spade	Pass	2 diamonds	2 hearts
Double	Pass	Pass	Pass

South was dubious about leaving in the double but, feeling that North would not double a less-than-game contract without a "sure thing," decided to "take a chance." He soon regretted it!

North opened the diamond five and South made the good play of failing to put up his ace, figuring that the lead probably was from a doubleton rather than a singleton. Declarer won the ten spot with the king and immediately led up to the spade king. North hopped up with the ace and then threw away the one chance of defeating the contract by leading his remaining diamond. South had to take the ace this time, and now it did not matter what he returned. He chose the natural lead of a club, North won the ace, and returned the suit. Declarer had plain sailing from this point; he simply led a low trump up to dummy's jack. North went in with the queen and led the third round of clubs. Declarer won and led another low heart. North took his ace, but never could make the ten spot of trumps, since declarer had merely to ruff the next spade lead and lay down the heart king. Result: Two hearts doubled, made for game and rubber.

South should have bid three diamonds (which would have gone down a trick) rather than leave in the double, and this despite the fact that the two heart contract should have been defeated one trick. There was no point whatever to North's second diamond lead while the J 3 of trumps remained in dummy. He had merely to exit with a club and declarer would have been helpless. If declarer led a diamond South would win and return a trump. North should cash his queen and ace and exit again, South eventually would have to get another diamond trick. If declarer led up to the heart jack instead of leading diamonds North should win with the queen, lay down the ace, and then play his deuce of diamonds for a third round diamond ruff.

Again I say, don't leave in close doubles except when the defense will be perfect.

Wish on Egyptian Beads Comes True for Mrs. Henry

Husband Named Judge of Mixed Court at Alexandria Shortly After Wife Expresses Desire to Go There.

By Jessie Ash Arndt.

A wish to go to Egypt, made on ancient Egyptian beads, has been followed by 11 years' residence there for Judge and Mrs. Robert Llewelyn Henry, now guests in Washington.

Coincidence linked their going to the superstition regarding the "blessing of Pharaoh" granting the wish of one who first holds the old Egyptian beads in his hands and voices his desire, and endowed the circumstances with the glamour of a fairy tale.

Judge and Mrs. Henry came from Chicago and were in Washington a year ago while Judge Henry served, with about 25 other legal authorities from all over the United States, on the Court of Contract Adjustment for the settlement of claims against the Government which were the outgrowth of the war. In the year this court settled claims similar to those which required 30 years to adjust after the Civil War. Judge and Mrs. Henry went from here to England, where Judge Henry had been invited to lecture at Oxford University, of which he is a graduate. They were preparing to return to this country to reside at Cambridge, Mass., while Judge Henry carried on research work at Harvard, just at the time the American Bar Association was being entertained in London. They remained for this gathering and the night before it ended was the occasion of Mrs. Henry's wish on the beads.

Makes a Wish.

They were having a farewell visit with a friend, recently back from Egypt, who urged them to go there before returning to America. Mrs. Henry said she was little interested in Egypt, with its deserts and camels. Her friend's reply was to bring her a strand of beads of beautiful color, telling how she had dug in the sand herself and found them, many of them probably thousands of years old.

"Oh I should like to go to Egypt and dig for such beads myself," exclaimed Mrs. Henry, holding them in her hands.

"You will go," said her friend. "I have never made a wish on the beads, you are the first person to hold them and express a wish, and they say it will be granted."

The next afternoon at the garden party given by their majesties, King George and Queen Mary, as the final function for members of the American Bar Association, Judge and Mrs. Henry noted Dean Roscoe Pound, of Yale, and Mr. Justice Charles Evans Hughes, then Secretary of State, in conversation. A moment later, Dean Pound joined Judge and Mrs. Henry and informed them Judge Henry was to be appointed to the Mixed Court at Alexandria, Egypt.

Wish Comes True.

Like the people in fairy tales, the Henrys have lived happily ever after. They have enjoyed Alexandria, both for its ideal climate and its interesting people. It is a cosmopolitan city with diplomats and officials from many parts of the world as well as a large English population comprising its society. Gardens abound in beautiful flowers and vegetables in great variety. Although there is practically no rain for months at a time, the waters of the Nile, carried into the city, are used for irrigation and for spraying lawns and gardens. Fruit is not so plentiful as are vegetables and is imported from other countries. On one occasion, a hostess remarked eight countries were represented in the fruit which formed the centerpiece for her table.

The Henrys home in Alexandria is called "Golden Moyah," because of the nine golden moyah trees in the garden. They have twisted, interlacing branches and a brilliant red blossom which comes out before the green foilage appears. Household servants, as well as those who do the outside work, are men, always immaculately dressed in their white, flowing gallabeahs, with red sashes at the waist and their high white turbans.

Remained for Summer.

At present there are 35,000 English troops in the harbor at Alexandria and more than the usual number of June weddings are taking place as young officers choose Alexandria girls as their brides, says Mrs. Henry.

Last summer, Judge and Mrs. Henry remained in Egypt instead of making their customary trip to Europe, and were visited by their two sons, Mr. Alvan Read Henry, who has just been gradauted from Yale University with first honor for the best architectural thesis, and Mr. Amasa McClelland Henry, who is in his first year at Oxford. Their niece, Mrs. Charles Peyton Lewis Greyer, jr., the former Miss Martha McClelland Stevens, daughter of Mrs. John Leo Coontz, of Washington, also visited them. The wedding veil she wore at her marriage, which took place last Friday, she purchased in Venice on her way home from Egypt.

Mr. Amasa McClelland Henry arrived in New York Monday aboard the Queen Mary, and came directly to Washington on his first trip to this country, since he was 8 years old.

Will Tour Nation.

Mr. Henry's father was the first Rhodes scholar at Oxford from Illinois and his uncle, Mr. Amasa K. Read, son of the late Judge Alvan Read, of Baton Rouge, La., the first Rhodes scholar from his State. Both men entered Oxford with the first Rhodes group to go from this country, in 1904.

A third son of Judge and Mrs. Henry, Mr. Robert Llewellyn Henry, is married and resides in Chicago.

After two weeks in Washington, Judge and Mrs. Henry and their two younger sons will leave by motor for a tour of the United States, visiting relatives in the South, stopping in Chicago, and continuing to the Pacific Coast.

MARY HAWORTH'S MAIL

Mother of Small Children Asks How Best to Help Them Fashion Their Lives.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: There are certain requisites for happy adulthood: a sense of proportion, absolute self-command, a belief in one's self. These things can be acquired—with difficulty—by the adult. How much better if the rudiments are acquired in childhood. And there you have my problem. How can I help my children develop these character traits? It seems to me there is more scope for a parent in the last-named of the three.

* * * *

To a certain extent one must be born with a sense of humor. Self-command is the reward of self-denial. But belief in one's self is nothing but confidence that one can do because one has done; that one can learn because one has learned. Every completed job, whether it be 100 examples of long division perfectly done by a fourth-grader, a bed perfectly made or a well-written essay, is a step in that direction. Anything learned, from the first word in the First Reader, leads toward self-confidence. The more one knows, the more one is able to do, the greater one's self-confidence.

* * * *

I am not interested in trying to fashion child prodigies. I am satisfied with the plan of study in the schools. What concerns me is that my children shall derive as much as possible from their studies. And what I wish to know is—how can I best help them?

My eldest child has a certain career in mind. He is now in the fifth grade. When the time comes for him to study his chosen profession he will be required to know (and to know well) certain subjects: English, mathematics, physics, history, algebra, plane goemetry. It will be to his advantage to have a knowledge of Latin. It will be to his further advantage to be proficient in certain physical sports, such as swimming, basketball, track, boxing. The elementary schools, the high schools, cover this territory, but can't I give him a head start? And is it possible for me to help him toward a sense of proportion? Toward self-command? So that, difficult though the work may be, he can "take it?"

* * * *

I mention one child. What will help him will surely help the others. Too, just think of the kick I will get out of it. It will keep me on my toes for I'll have to be at least one jump ahead of them all the time and there will be no end to it. Like the frog on the 12-foot board who jumped 6 feet the first time and halved the remaining distance in every subsequent jump . . .!

MOTHER OF FOUR.

The Parents' Role.

DEAR MOTHER OF FOUR: If you give your children a serenely happy home life, presided over by two parents who have themselves achieved mental and emotional adulthood and who can invest their household with a sense of social and economic security, you will have done just about all you need do toward furthering your children's potential careers. Of course, you can be discriminating in your choice of schools for them; you can be sympathetically and, I hope, objectively interested in their problems as they bring them to you for discussion, and you can hold your wisdom born of longer experience at their disposal for them to draw upon at will.

* * * *

But if you are truly wise, you will develop interests in life independent of your children's interests and your children's tentative plans for the future. You will refrain from wielding a heavy hand and in fashioning or attempting to fashion the pattern of their lives. As a matter of fact, there is something rather disturbingly egoistic, if not neurotic, in your exclamation, "Just think of the kick I will get out of" making my children's dreams come true. That is your children's business and your children's privilege—indeed, their duty and their responsibility—to chart their own course and surmount the stumbling blocks which lie along the way.

* * * *

Your eldest child may have a certain career in mind. But if he is now only in the fifth grade, he will probably change his mind half a dozen times before he crosses the threshold of adulthood, and perhaps even before he enters college. Leave him free to change his mind. Don't lock him up in a pigeonhole at this tender age, by going ahead full blast yourself with plans for making him the Great Engineer, or the Great Author, or the Great Architect, or the Great Statesman, or the Great Diplomat, or whatever it is that he has today expressed a boyish desire to be.

* * * *

The way to teach your children a sense of proportion, a capacity for self-command, is to possess those qualities yourself. What a parent is in himself affects a child far more vitally than anything the parent may say; or even than any heroic gestures the parent may make which are not natural expressions of that parent's integrated inner self.

* * * *

The way to invest a child with a feeling of self-confidence is to begin, in cradle days, to give him little tasks to do which are within his capacity to do, and then encourage him in the doing thereof. But let him do them. Don't be constantly interfering, suggesting and showing the better way. When he has done his best, reward him with simply and sincerely worded praise. From picking up his rattle to dressing himself to performing small courtesies for others to mastering his lessons in school is a continuous and interlocking process of education in self-confidence, and self-sufficiency.

Today's HEALTH TALK

By Dr. Irving S. Cutter.

Loss of eyesight is a calamity that requires great fortitude and courage if it is to be borne with equanimity. Important results have followed the move to conserve the eyesight of newborn babies through the instillation of a silver solution shortly after birth. If the organisms causing gonorrhea are present in the infant's eyes, the antiseptic thus provided will destroy them. This is but one of the many sight-saving measures.

Accidents are sometimes responsible for loss of vision, but the chief cause of blindness after middle life is due to glaucoma. The disease is characterized by an increase of pressure within the eyeball and the reason we have so much of it is that the victims are unacquainted with its early symptoms.

Headache Is Symptom.

First, the common symptom of headache. This is usually not constant, but may be quite severe and is likely to be noticed in the morning shortly after rising. Occasionally it comes on at night. The pain may be on one side of the head only and is often accompanied by nausea and vomiting.

Most of these patients will note that the vision is hazy or smoky and some will mention seeing colored halos when they look at bright lights.

When the disease is acute there is intense pain and the eye will show considerable congestion with a "steamy" appearance of the cornea (the front part of the eye). If pressure continues even for a few hours vision is endangered and may be lost entirely.

Exact Cause Unknown.

The name glaucoma was applied to the disease because of the greenish hue observed in the dilated pupil of elderly persons. This is in sharp contrast with the grayish looking pupil observed in cataracts.

We do not know the exact cause, but it has some relationship to senile changes—the wear and tear of life. It has been estimated that 6 per cent of all patients over 40 years of age who present themselves for eye examinations are suffering from some form of glaucoma and there is a woeful wastage of eyesight because the disease is undetected in ample time for treatment. The mere fitting of glasses, if the individual is 50 or more years of age, is unwise unless the tension of the eyeball is accurately determined at the time.

Fortunately, much can be done. Every effort must be made to bring the general health to a normal level and this means the removal of infection and the avoidance of worry, anxiety and excess fatigue. Drugs can be used to keep the pupil tightly contracted, and hot applications and gentle massage of the eyeball are useful. Prompt surgical treatment is necessary should the conditiion become acute. This involves an incision into the eye itself for the relief of tension. If this operation is performed in time the sight in most instances will be preserved.

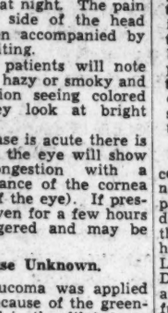
Modern Canning Methods

RIGHT NOW is canning time. Can strawberries for sauce. Make sun-preserves or strawberry and rhubarb jam. Fill jars with juice for fruit punch or sirup for puddings.



For the beautiful sun-preserves, in which the berries become transparent as gems, hull, wash and drain two quarts of ripe, perfect strawberries. Place them in a preserving kettle in layers of berries and sugar, using two quarts of sugar. Add juice of one lemon, let stand a half hour. Heat slowly to boiling point, cook five minutes. Pour into shallow pans and cover each with a sheet of glass, as shown in sketch. Set in hot sun three days, stirring gently two or three times a day. Turn into small, sterilized glasses, and seal with paraffin.

Do you know the "teapot trick" with paraffin? Melt it in a small anameled teapot. Then it's easy to pour paraffin onto preserves. No burnt fingers, and you can easily remelt paraffin in teapot.

Many fruits hold their shape better if canned by the cold-pack method. Full instructions for this method; processing for glass jars or tin cans; many new, delicious recipes for preserves, pickles, canned meats—all in our 40-page booklet, "New Ways of Canning Fruits, Vegetables and Meats." No failures, many delightful surprises, if you follow directions.

Women Abroad Look to U. S. to Gain Equality

National Women's Party Fetes League Delegate Here for Convention.

By Hope Ridings Miller.

THE POSITION of American women offers European women the only gleam of hope that their rights, their independence and their place in public life will be restored.

This is the opinion of Mrs. Lillian von Matsch, widely known feminist of Vienna, Austria, who yesterday was guest of honor at a luncheon at headquarters of the National Woman's Party.

Formerly chairman of the woman's consultative committee of the League of Nations, and now heading the committee's "propaganda group," Mrs. von Matsch came to this country to attend the Democratic Convention in behalf of the National Woman's Party, "because," as she expalined, "Alice Paul and other members of this organization have done so much at Geneva to help the position of women throughout the the world."

Sees Hope for Millions.

As a member of the only official feminine committee connected with the League of Nations, Mrs. von Matsch has had a rare opportunity to study the "woman question" as it concerns 45,000,000 women from all countries. As a result of her observations and study, she is convinced that "what women do in America has a tremendous influence in Europe.

"If the equal rights bill could be passed in this country it would be the biggest help we could possibly have in getting the League of Nations to recommend the equal rights treaty to its members," she said. "The latter would, of course, virtually solve women's problems in all nations belonging to the world and would strengthen woman's position as nothing else could."

Pointing out that "if American women had not given us their enthusiastic support so far, we in Europe could not have retained even a semblance of our rights," Mrs. von Matsch further explained that the position of women in Austria is much better than that of German women. "We still have the vote and, in theory, we still have most of the rights we once had. But in reality, economic pressure is forcing Austrian women back to the home as surely as it forced German women back. Our only chance to regain our former place in public life is to get the League to support the equal rights treaty. What has so far been accomplished in that regard has been due largely to the support of American women."

Born, Made Debut Here.

Mrs. von Matsch herself is an American. In fact, she was born and reared and made her debut here. Her blue eyes twinkled as she remarked, "I used to be a socialite before I became a humanitarian."

She left for Philadelphia after the luncheon yesterday, where she will attend the Democratic convention. The latter part of the week she will return to Washington for a brief visit and will attend a tea to be given in her honor at the National Woman's Party headquarters on Sunday afternoon. Early next week she will leave on the Queen Mary for England and will go from there to Paris, then to Geneva, on her way to her home in Vienna.

'Average Person' Has His Complexes

Cleveland (AP).—The fellow whose ego cavorts in Napoleonic complexes has plenty of company among the average persons in the opinion of Dr. Blake Crider, who conducts a course in abnormal psychology at Fenn College.

"Look among your friends," said the doctor. "There's the Good-Old-Days-er, the 100-per-cent-er, the Never-Had-A-Dater, the Model Child and others—all a trifle abnormal."

Of the "100-per-cent-er," Dr. Crider said, he hasn't anything to talk about, but he doesn't want you to know how inferior he is, so he builds himself up.

And the Model Child—"Why do people glorify these puritanical, starched little girls? Behind their books they are day dreaming. When they finally get out in the world, they fold up at the first snag." The girl who has never had a date, Dr. Crider said, is usually the one who shouts, "Down with the men!" "You know she would give her right eye to have a man's attention," the doctor observed. "She is known as the Sour-Graper."

The 'Only Child' Evokes Real Pity

Camp Director Calls Him Our Saddest Product.

"The only child in a family is probably the saddest product of our modern civilization," declared Ernst Hermann, director of Boston University's Sargent Summer Camps for Girls in Petersboro, N. H., in an address given recently at a reunion of 100 campers and their parents held in Boston, reports a university bulletin.

"Children need to play a lot, to work a lot, to have group activities with other children," he continued.

"The strongest arguments for the growth of the camp movement, the Boy and Girl Scout movements and the Campfire movement are found in the fact that all of these means of education come closer to the biological needs of youth than the more artificial means of education, particularly in our modern school system. It is the close, intimate contact with a number of other children of almost the same age which is, if properly guided, so stimulating to child growth and development.

And Call It Accident

By Mrs. Belloc Lowndes

CHAPTER XIV.

IRIS had time to feel surprised her husband had gone so far—much farther than they two ever went, good swimmers though they both were. Flashing the glasses this way and that, she caught a glimpse of Ruth's red cap. It looked as if it were floating on the water. Then suddenly it vanished. But where was the boat in which they had gone out? She could see no sign of it.

All at once she noticed that the trapdoor had been left open. Scrambling down the stepladder like a streak of lightning, with a sob of relief, she saw Troy, just getting ready to leave the beach.

She gasped out, "Unmoor the motor boat! Capt. Trefane and the young lady are out there and they are having trouble. The Queen of Cornwall has drifted away."

She knew Troy understood how to run the motor boat, and after one glance at her pallid face he opened up the throttle and they bounded through the waves.

"Let her all out," muttered Iris.

"I've done that, ma'am. We'll be with them in a minute or two."

But the minute or two seemed very long, although they were skimming along at a great rate.

Iris had forgotten everything but Philip. For the moment Ruth Starling and all they had hoped to make out of the American girl had become as nothing. She made a trumpet of her hands and screamed. "Darling, I'm coming!"

And then, all at once, she saw Ruth Starling come up on to the surface of the water and then disappear again. Was it for the third time? Iris hardly cared. All her heart, all her thoughts, all her prayers—for Iris was praying for the first time in years—were for her husband.

Ruth Is Missing.

At last the motor boat seemed to give a leap right up to where he was floating, with his eyes shut and a look on his face she had never seen there.

Bending over the side of the boat she seized his outstretched hand, and sobbingly exclaimed, "Darling—what happened?"

"I had a touch of cramp—first time in my life," he gasped. With her help, and as if making considerable physical effort, he threw himself on to the deck of the motor boat.

And then it was as if Iris came back to everyday life.

"Where's Ruth Starling?" she cried. "Phil? We must save her!"

She did not wait for an answer but leaped herself into the water, fully clothed though she was.

Despairingly she began seeking for the drowning girl, and then she gave a choking cry, for suddenly she saw Ruth and began swimming toward her strongly.

"It's all right," she shouted, "I'm close to you now. Can't you turn and float?" But Ruth was too far spent to do even that.

Iris began circling warily around the half submerged body, which looked so small and helpless in that waste of waters. She was afraid that Ruth might belong to the type of swimmer who, when his nerves give way, clutches his would-be rescuer and draws him down to death.

Meanwhile Philip Trefane, although an abstemious man, had swallowed a tumblerful of the bottle of brandy which was kept in the locker of the motor boat.

He was lying down again now, his muddled mind already busy with what would be wisest and safest to say at the inquiry, which he knew would undoubtedly be held in time, concerning the death by drowning of "Ruth Starling, American citizen, and recently paying guest at Perranth Castle." It was possible—in fact he thought and hoped it was probable that the body might not be found for days.

Regains Consciousness.

And then there fell on his ears an utterly unexpected and most unwelcome sound. It was his wife's voice calling out, "Phil? Help me to get her on board!"

He made no effort to obey that insistent order, and again there came an urgent, imperative shout, "Phil? Is anything the matter? Can't you move?"

He roused himself, and at last gave a hand in dragging Ruth's unconscious body over the side of the boat.

"She's dead, isn't she?" he asked in a thick voice.

But Iris was already forcing some brandy between the girl's lips as she answered, "Thank God, no. She's only unconscious; Troy and I will soon bring her round. Don't you worry any more, darling, you lie back and rest."

Somewhat to her surprise he obeyed her. Closing his eyes he did not even look on as she and the old man made vigorous efforts to resuscitate the girl who had so nearly perished in that placid stretch of sea.

At last Ruth Starling sat up and looked about her dazedly. "Where am I?" she asked feebly.

"You're on the motor boat, Ruth, and everything is quite all right, excepting that the Queen of Cornwall has sailed off on her own, to sea," said Iris somewhat coldly. She now had time to feel angry that the American girl was not a better swimmer.

At last Philip Trefane sat up, too, but he avoided, as he did so, his wife's anxious eyes. "I'd no idea cramp was such a hellish thing," he muttered as if to himself.

The old sailor threw him a quick glance; then he turned away and busied himself with the task of bringing the motor boat safely back to its moorings on the castle beach. Troy had had cramp more than once in his long seafaring life, and he was convinced that the captain had been shamming.

Plans for Silence.

Iris herself put her paying guest to bed, refusing to accept the other's now tearful protestations of gratitude for having been saved from a horrible death, and when Ruth protested at all the trouble that was being taken for her, including the heated blankets and the half bottle of champagne served with her tray supper, her hostess observed, with that strange, rather malicious witchlike smile of hers, "You must be quite well by tomorrow, mustn't you? It wouldn't do to disappoint Lord John, would it?"

"What snobs Americans are!", thought the other with a touch of disgust. And then a slight grimace came over her face, for she was always honest with herself. "And English people are just as bad," she told herself.

No one knew better than Iris Trefane that there were many girls, beautiful and of distinguished parentage, who would willingly have married Lady Cicester's ugly, eccentric son if only he could be brought to think of marriage.

Philip had also gone to bed and when, after making their guest comfortable, his wife went in to see how he was getting on, he exclaimed, "I hope old Troy will hold his tongue; we don't want the story of that horrid adventure all over the place."

Iris agreed and she did not add, as 99 wives out of 100 would have done that, unless a miracle occurred the truth must come out unless the Queen of Cornwall drifted back of its own accord during the coming night. But he went on, "You might see the old chap the first thing tomorrow, darling. Say it maks Miss Starling nervous to think any one should know what happened. He'll keep mum for her and for you, though he wouldn't for me."

"I don't think he'll tell any one about it this evening—that sort of Cornish man isn't a babbler," she observed.

"D'you think you could get that girl to stay mum about it, too? I mean when she's out with John tomorrow?"

"If I make a point of it I'm sure she'll not say one word."

Girls Are Advised To Pick Shy Men For Life Mates

The girl who wants a good husband should concentrate on the shy type of man, advises Mrs. Grace Loucks Elliott, psychologist and writer. In a recent lecture at Boston University she told girls in the college of practical arts and letters that "the most popular men in college usually do not make the best husbands."

Prospective married couples, Mrs. Elliott said, should ask themselves the questions, "What can we talk about?" and "What can we do together?" She pointed out that a "married couple should disagree enough to that there would be some fun in talking together."

She suggested two test questions to determine a girl's character. They were: "How would you spend $1,000 if you were suddenly given a check for that amount?" and "If you could have the one wish you want most what would you ask for?"

Mothers Need Poise to Face Emergencies of Children

By Alice Clarissa Richmond.

MRS. BROWN always fainted or grew nauseated at the sight of blood. If her husband or one of her children cut himself she was helpless and had to send for a doctor or call in a neighbor to give first-aid treatment. If she had ever been caught in a tight spot where there was no help to be gotten, she might have left the injured person to bleed to death. She would have been lying in a dead faint, unable to lend a hand.

So sensitive a person is really quite unfit to be a mother. A mother has to be able to face stoically any kind of injury. She must acquire the poise which enables her to forget herself and her feelings, and to act as a machine. She cannot allow her emotions to get the better of her. For the moment she must be indifferent, doing efficiently the next thing essential to the child's welfare.

There may come moments when the strain seems almost superhuman. She may have to hold a child firm for an emergency operation, wash and bind up wounds which seem fatal, apply a tournquet, treat a burn. There is often not time to wait for help when a major accident occurs. The child may bleed to death unless the mother manages to keep her head and control her nerves.

And it can be done. If she will forget herself, put her imagination to sleep, and keep busy, she can control herself. There is no virture in being sensitive. It does not show any special refinement of spirit. It is simply a subconscious way of dodging unpleasantness. A few lessons in first aid and a little practical application of the results would be of value to this school of weak sisters.

It is a question of conscious will power.

$43,523,910 Bill Is Signed By President

Way Clear for Roosevelt to Launch Fiscal Relations Study.

The 1937 District supply bill, over which Congress wrangled three and a half months, became a law yesterday when it was signed by President Roosevelt.

Carrying $43,523,910, it is one of the largest appropriation bills for the District of Columbia in history, being exceeded only by the "prosperity era" acts of 1931 and 1932. It carries more than $7,000,000 in capital improvements.

Signing of the measure opened the way for the President to launch a fiscal relations study, authorized by an amendment. Upon the basis of the findings the future Federal contributions to the District will be made, unless Congress repudiates its own bargain.

Study Wide in Scope.

Adopting a recommendation of Daniel W. Bell, acting director of the budget, Mr. Roosevelt said he will confer with the budget director before announcing the agency which will make the fiscal relations study. He said he had given no thought to the personnel.

This study will be of a broad nature, not confined to the comparative tax rates of cities in the same class as Washington. It presumably will be made by experts with a $50,000 authorization, taken from the Federal lump-sum payment.

The bill was passed by the House on March 6, by the Senate on April 23, and the conferees' report was adopted on June 19.

Total appropriations for the next fiscal year exceed by $1,758,910 the recommendations of the Budget Bureau and by $2,600,837 the appropriations in the 1936 act.

Courts Are Included.

While the Senate added $1,290,043 to the House bill, the conferees whittled the increase by $339,810 to $950,627.

Among the major construction projects authorized are a new municipal courts building in Judiciary Square, a replacement to Chain Bridge, an addition to Eastern High School, and the following other projects:

Addition to Lafayette School, completion of second floor of Hardy School, addition and gymnasium at Truesdell School, addition and gymnasium at Grimke School, addition and gymnasium at Young School, begin construction of vocational school for girls to replace Dennison School, addition and gymnasium at Paul Junior High School, addition and gymnasium at Alice Deal Junior High School, and completion of Anacostia Junior-Senior High School.

The only important omissions from the act, in comparison with the Budget Bureau estimates, were $78,000 for character education and $700,000 off the Federal contribution.

Employes of Parks May Get Pay Today

The more than 4,200 employes of the Washington buildings branch, National Park Service, whose June 15 pay was tied up in the deficiency bill, will receive their checks late today or early tomorrow.

Charles A. Peters, jr., head of the buildings branch and assistant director of the parks bureau, made the promise yesterday as aids rushed compliance with the numerous steps that lie between signing of the deficiency bill by President Roosevelt, which was accomplished Monday, and distribution of the overdue salaries.

Conditions, which ordinarily would take six or seven days to complete, will be met in 48 hours in order to expedite the flow of released funds, not only into the hands of workers but also rental agents and utility companies, whose bills have not been paid since April 1, Peters declared.

Boy, 8, Suffers Serious Hurts In Fall Off Tree

James Lawson, 8, of 4016 Kansas avenue northwest, was injured seriously yesterday when he fell 20 feet from a tree limb to the sidewalk near his home.

The boy was climbing in the tree with his brother, William, 10, when a branch gave way.

Taken to Garfield Hospital, he was treated for a fractured skull and concussion of the brain. His conditions is described as serious.

D. C. Veterans On Relief Told To Cash Bonus

Must Put Their Money to 'Good Uses,' Welfare Board Says.

Some 200 World War veterans now on direct relief in the District will have to cash their bonus bonds and expend the money for legitimate purposes, the Board of Public Welfare ruled yesterday in approving the recommendation of its public assistance committee.

Elwood W. Street, public welfare director, explained it had long been the policy of the board to require relief recipients to utilize monetary resources other than current income, such as unexpired insurance and bequests.

"The board sees no reason for changing this policy with respect to former service men," he said.

The board took the attitude the bonus should be regarded as a cash resource, particularly because it was sought from Congress, he added.

Each case will be handled on an individual basis, Street said, and the veterans will be given advice, if they wish to remain on relief, as to what legitimate uses they may put the bonus cash.

It would be possible, he added, for a veteran to use the money to make repairs on his home in order to save himself from being forced to move into a rented house. It also might be utilized for the payment of legitimate debts.

The question as to how the cash should be used in regard to relief, which may or may not be continued, will be handled on an individual basis after investigation by case workers," Street said.

Woman Out on Bond After 'Numbers' Raid

Elnora Morris, 26, colored, of 1806 Vernon street northwest, was charged with operating a lottery yesterday and released on $500 bond when police raided an alleged "numbers" establishment in the 1800 block Eighteenth street northwest.

A quantity of "numbers" slips and marked money was seized. The woman was arraigned before Commissioner Needham C. Turnage and the case continued two weeks for hearing.

In the excitement both police and firemen were called. John G. Curtis, the janitor, found the bomb, which to him was an unknown quantity, as he was burning trash. When it exploded the gas flooded the basement and then seeped to the upper floors.

86 Teachers Of Vocations Ask Pay Raise

Ballou Opposes Salary Jump Despite Change to Junior Rating.

Education Board Faces Problem; Gilligan Is Interested in Case.

Differences between Dr. Frank W. Ballou, superintendent of schools, and members of the Teachers' Union over the salary status of the 86 vocational teachers in the District public schools yesterday gave the board of education one of its important post-school term problems.

Legislation by which the status of the five vocational schools will be raised to junior high school level becomes effective July 1.

The teachers, through officers of the Teachers' Union, the Vocational Association and the Central Labor Union, are asking that their salary schedules be raised accordingly from elementary to junior high school level.

Dr. Ballou has contended that the act "to raise trade or vocational schools to the level of junior high schools" does not automatically boost the salary ratings. He has argued that the legislation was intended not to raise salaries but to "reorganize vocational education and give it a higher and better status."

Gilligan Interested.

Awaiting a full report from Dr. Ballou, the special board committee on vocational education probably will not bring the question before today's meeting of the board. However, Henry Gilligan, chairman of the committee, reported yesterday he had heard teacher representatives; that he was interested in the problem, and hoped for an early decision.

According to E. J. Murphy, teacher and president of the vocational association, the teachers are appealing for salary raises, such as would be provided by application of the junior high salary schedules, on a basis of teaching experience.

On a statement read before Gilligan's committee Murphy said:

"It has always been the policy of the schools over a long period of time automatically to place in a new salary scale those already doing the work for which a new salary is provided.

"We ask that as a matter of justice those who through a period of years have served and developed these schools be given the benefits of the act whether they be vocational or academic teachers."

Act Amended.

The act passed several weeks ago by Congress amends the existing teacher salary act of the District of Columbia. It directs the Board of Education "to classify and assign the teachers and principals in the service in trade or vocational schools on July 1, 1936, to the salary classes and positions in the foregoing salary schedule for said trade or vocational schools, in accordance with such rules as the Board of Education shall prescribe."

The "foregoing salary schedule" provides that vocational teachers may receive salaries ranging from $1,600 to $2,800 (the junior high rating). Under the elementary schedule the vocational teachers have been receiving salaries between $1,400 and $2,200.

Dr. Ballou has pointed out that only those vocational teachers who can qualify with training and experience as junior high teachers are entitled to the higher wage level.

No More Jails for Smoky

Pony Nabbed in Burglar Scare; Young Owner Goes His Bond

Police Respond to Early Morning Alarm and Make Arrest; Peter Fineran, 15, Gives Promise to Get Stronger Halter.

And when Peter Fineran, 15, 116 C street, discovered his pet was missing, he hopped a bicycle to search the neighborhood. Smoky, he knew, wouldn't let anyone else ride him and he was frantic over the pony's disappearance.

Police were called early in the morning while Peter was still asleep. Someone, neighbors reported, was trying to enter garages in an alley—and who ever it was made "enough noise for a horse." Policemen Gideon F. Cherry and J. E. Fippin responded to the alarm. They found Smoky kicking refuse cans around the alley with little regard for peace and quiet. They took him to the Fifth Precinct station.

So later, after his tour of the neighborhood, Peter found the pony in stir and immediately bailed him out with promises to obtain a stronger halter. It was Smoky's second scrape with the law. Several months ago he wandered from his stable and served time until Peter claimed him.

Peter is proud of Smoky. The pet, he said, was shipped to him by an uncle in Wyoming. Smoky apparently likes city life. He grazes all day on a lot adjacent to the House Office Building and at night is lodged in a compact stable built by Peter at the rear of his home.

There are few youngsters who never harbored a secret—or open—desire to own a pony. But Peter doesn't play cowboys and Indians, nor pretend he is a gallant knight bent on the rescue of a fair maiden. Peter—the fellows call him Pete—is the only one who can manage Smoky. He admitted he didn't play "sissie" games with the pony.

"I teach him tricks and ride him on the bridle paths in Potomac Park," said Pete. "But if I get much bigger, my feet will drag on the ground and I'll have to turn Smoky over to my little brother, David. I guess Smoky won't run away for good because he likes us."

Officials Urge Summer School Pupils to Enroll

Term Begins Week From Today; 9,000 Expected for Classes.

Pupils wishing to enroll in the public summer school which opens July 1 were urged by the office of the superintendent of schools yesterday to register as soon as possible.

Most of the pupils registered with their principals before the regular school term ended last week. However, others, especially from private schools and schools outside the District, are still expected to join the vacation classes, according to E. J. Lockwood, director.

Nearly 5,000 pupils attended the white schools last summer, and 4,000 were enrolled in the colored. Approximately the same number of enrollments are expected for this summer. The term, beginning a week from today, will end August 11.

Senior high classes will be conducted at Central High School. Macfarland and Stuart Junior High Schools will be opened for classes in that department. Elementary classes will be conducted in 12 schools: Blair, Brown, Burroughs, Curtis, Emery, Fairbrother, Force, Petworth, Pierce, Wallace, West and Webster.

The colored schools to be open will include: Dunbar High School, Barnet - Patterson Junior High School and Bell, Burrville, J. F. Cook, Garrison, Lovejoy, Mott, Giddings, Phillips and Sumner grade schools.

Posthumous Honor Awarded to Dunlap

A Navy Cross Star was awarded posthumously yesterday by order of President Roosevelt to the late Brig. Gen. Robert H. Dunlap, of the United States Marine Corps, who died five years ago while trying to save the life of a French peasant woman.

The award was made for this sacrifice, the citation reading, "for distinguishing himself conspicuously by extraordinary courage on May 19, 1931, at La Fariniere, Cinq-Mars-la-Bile, where he met his death in a supreme effort to save the life of a French peasant woman."

A native of this city, Gen. Dunlap received his second lieutenant's commission for his service during the Spanish-American War. He also saw action in the Boxer Rebellion and the World War. For his World War service he received the Distinguished Service Medal from the Navy and the Navy Cross.

Mrs. Connelly Goes on Trial In Gun Death

Daughter, 18, Testifies on Shooting Fatal to Her Father.

Park Officer, Defendant Drunk at the Time, Court Is Told.

Mrs. Alice J. Connelly, who allegedly shot and fatally wounded her husband, Park Policeman John Connelly, as the tragic end of a St. Patrick's Day celebration, sobbed softly in District Supreme Court yesterday as her husband's .38 caliber revolver was introduced as the weapon with which he was slain.

The woman, who is indicted for second-degree murder in the death of her husband, went on trial and heard her 18-year-old daughter, Frances, reconstruct the scene in the Connelly home at 2220 Eighteenth street northwest the night of the shooting.

Frances, who testified for the Government, said her father had been drinking for several days. On the evening of the slaying, she asserted, her father and mother both were intoxicated when they returned from a party in a cafe on P street.

Tells of Shots.

An argument broke out while she was in the kitchen, and she heard a shot, she said.

"I rushed to the front room of the house and saw mother standing at the foot of a studio couch," she testified.

"She was pointing a revolver at herself. I was frightened. I left the room, and then I heard another shot and went for help."

Physicians from Emergency Hospital testified that Connelly's death was due to a gunshot wound in the left side of his chest, the bullet apparently having been fired at close range.

Connelly was slumped on the floor of the front room when they arrived, Policeman John Titus and George McConnell, first to reach the scene, told the court. They said his fingers were grabbing the revolver.

Ruth Knight, who was with the Connellys on the party at the cafe and afterward accompanied them home, said she left their apartment about midnight, while Connelly was asleep on the studio couch.

Testify on Drinking.

John Cahill, proprietor of the cafe, and Anna Gross, a wairtess, asserted the Connellys had only three bottles of beer apiece at the restaurant. Both Connelly and his wife had had "something to drink" before they left their home Mrs. Mary Courtney, who was caring for the younger children, William, 11, and Mary, 9, during their parents' absence said.

Testimony of Detective Clyde M. Strange, of the homicide squad, was interrupted to allow the defense to introduce its only witness, Lieut. H. Helms, of the Park Police.

He said he had been called frequently to the Connelly home on reports that the officer was mistreating his wife. Mrs. Connelly always denied this, he added.

The jury was selected quickly yesterday. It includes one woman, Mrs. Mary G. Richardson, of 1612 Hobart street northwest.

Other jurors are Thomas H. A'Beckett, of 128 Rhode Island avenue; Maurice E. Ament, of 818 Somerset place northwest; Harry J. Bean, of 4011 Eighteenth street northwest; Edward C. Jones, of 1826 Massachusetts avenue; Edward A. Lloyd, of 903 Eleventh street southeast; Edgar F. McIntire, of 5940 Third street northwest; Arthur W. Mandeville, of 7528 Morningside drive northwest; Edgar V. Mason, of 1423 Morse street northeast; Franklin M. Megby, of 510 Concord avenue northwest; Samuel N. Otto, of 818 Shepherd street northwest, and Charles Robey, of 718 Farragut street northwest.

The curtailed summer hours of stores does not start on this Saturday as reported in yesterday's Post, but on the following Saturday, July 4, and will continue on the remaining Saturdays during July and August.

The stores will all be open this Saturday as usual, the Merchants' and Manufacturers' Association announced yesterday.

Cruise Suicide's Body Discovered

The body of Raymond E. Olive, 26, of 809 Sixth street southwest, was found floating in the Potomac River yesterday near Mount Vernon. Olive leaped overboard from the steamboat Potomac Saturday night.

The body was found by James Carlin, of Herberts Spring, Md., floating a few yards off the Maryland shore. William Olive, of Emmerton, Md., brother of the dead man, identified the corpse.

An inquest will be held by Prince Georges County authorities today.

Olive jumped overboard from the boat after leaving his coat, shoes and tie on the deck. The clothing was identified Monday by Mrs. Raymond Olive as belonging to her husband.

Killer Testifies He Meant Only To Shoot Self

William Martin McNamara, 20, Petersburg, Va., yesterday told a jury in the District Supreme Court how he went to a K street restaurant to effect a reconciliation with his estranged wife, and then shot and killed John Mikedis, the chef, after his wife had refused his entreaty to return to him.

McNamara said he went to the restaurant at 804 K street northwest to beg his wife, Mrs. Ruth McNamara, to resume their married life. When she refused, he said, he attempted to carry out a plan to end his own life "so my wife could see me die." In desperation, the youth shot aimlessly, he said, and one bullet struck Mikedis in the stomach.

Mrs. McNamara, then on duty as a waitress, attempted to wrest the gun from her husband. After the shot was fired, the husband shot Samuel J. Alley, manager of the place, in the leg, accusing Alley of being instrumental in having his wife remain away from him.

Taking the stand in his defense, McNamara asserted he had no intention of shooting anyone but himself. He said he carried a small gun so he could, if his wife refuased to live with him, kill himself. He bore no animosity against either Mikedis or Alley, he said, although police quoted him as stating, after his arrest, that he was sorry he had not killed both.

Attractive young Mrs. McNamara told the jury she was serving customers in the place when her husband entered and asked her to step outside to talk to him. She said they went, talked for a while and then re-entered the restaurant.

At that point, she said, McNamara whipped out a pistol, screamed incoherently, and began shooting. Mikedis, attracted by the shooting, came out of the kitchen and was met with a fusillade. Even after he had fallen, she said, McNamara continued shooting and Alley, the manager, was struck by a stray shot.

The case is expected to go to the jury late today, with only character witnesses expected to take the stand. McNamara finished his recifal of the incident yesterday and his attorneys, E. Russell Kelly and Frank Kelly, indicated they would supplement his testimony only with that of persons who could vouch for his character.

Street Moves to Meet Budget Cuts in 1937 District Measure.

Complete Reorganization of Welfare Set-up Is Predicted.

Effect of the budget reduction won by House conferees on the 1937 District bill was felt yesterday in the District Building as Public Welfare Director Elwood W. Street recommended to the District Commissioners that 125 employes of the public assistance division be dismissed as of July 1.

The order, which was delayed due to the absence of Commissioner George E. Allen, is made necessary by the proviso in the District bill that not more than $200,000 of the $1,600,000 for relief may be used for salaries.

The proviso, the work of Representative Thomas L. Blanton, represented a compromise. The limitation voted by the House was approximately $177,000. The Senate struck out the restriction, but its conferees ultimately were forced to accept it with a $200,000 limitation.

While Street's recommendations will reduce the personnel staff from about 312 to approximately 187, the original House proposal would have cut the administrative set-up to 140. The Budget Bureau recommended 230.

Street predicted that the slash will necessitate a complete reorganization of the relief administration.

He also expressed the belief that the $1,600,000 will be insufficient to meet the District's needs for the full fiscal year. Senator Elmer Thomas (Democrat), Oklahoma, in considering the request of the Commissioners that the sum be increased to $3,000,000, said that the Seventy-Fifth Congress will convene in plenty of time to vote additional funds if they become necessary.

He also pointed out at the time that welfare officials will be able to make a much more accurate estimate next January than they could have last spring.

$2,500 Church Loot Found by Police

Police recovered from two second-hand stores the broken and desecrated chalice, valued at $2,500, stolen from the rectory of St. Aloysius Church, North Capitol and I streets.

The jewel-studded gold goblet was stolen almost two months ago, the Rev. Lawrence J. Kelley, pastor, reported to police Friday. He said the vessel was used only on special feast days and had not been used since Easter. It had been locked in a cabinet in the rectory.

Only two diamonds of the many stones — diamonds, emeralds and sapphires that were embedded in the goblet—were recovered. A gold serving plate used with the goblet was found, but a large hole had been cut in it in an effort to eradicate the name of the church.

The parts of the chalice were recovered by Detective Sergts. Charles Warfield and Ben Johnson in the stores several weeks ago. Thinking they were stolen, they brought them to headquarters. It was two weeks later that the theft was reported.

Actress-Coach Deserts Coast For Calm East

By the United Press.

Ouspenskaya, of whom you've probably never heard, is one of the ranking drama instructors of the Nation and a grand actress. No sooner had she checked in than half the picture colony besieged her for coaching or consultation.

She was coaxed away from her drama schools in New York and Peterboro, N. H., to do a part in Samuel Goldwyn's "Dodsworth," but agreed to travel west only on condition her part be washed up in four days.

Ouspenskaya spent the first day answering the telephone, but thereafter the studio refused to accept calls for her, and when not working she hid out in an obscure retreat with the phone disconnected.

Among her former pupils are Franchot Tone, Joan Crawford, Frances Farmer, Margo and Katharine (the Great) Hepburn.

Charred Oak, One Guesses.

Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers promise a simplified version of their new "Swing Waltz" for ballroom use, but perhaps you had better not try it unless you own a "half-baked floor. The dancers steered clear of usual polished footing, because it was too slippery, and instead pranced on a cooked fibre board sheet. The inspiration belongs to Van Nest Polglase, art director, who found the oven baked board shiny but non-skid.

Columbians delighted Henry Eicheim, retired conductor of the Boston and Philharmonic orchestras, by giving his collection of oriental musical instruments the first workout in years.

Technicians hunting props for a "Tibetan Funeral" in "The Lost Horizon," sought Eichheim in Santa Barbara to ask permission to copy his weird horns and drums. Flattered, the musician not only insisted on transporting them to Hollywood, but came along himself to show Mexican, Indian and Filipino "Tibetans" how to play 'em.

Cutting-Room Scraps.

"Tepee? Sure do," said Oakie. "My old daddy wore one for years."

Gail Patrick, flying in from Vancouver, was greeted affectionately by an unidentified stripling who cracked: "I brought three cars so there'd be sure to be room for your baggage."

Henry Armetta, returned from a Mexico City vacation, is cast with Binnie Barnes and Victor McLaglen in "A Fool for Blondes."

Watching Them Make Pictures.

Hollywood, June 23.

On the set of "Dodsworth," Ruth Chatterton and Marie Ouspenskaya, who played the role of the baroness in the stage play with Walter Huston, are doing a scene.

BARBARA STANWYCK

Miss Ouspenskaya has read her lines often enough to know them. Now her audience is Director William Wyler. He sits in a chair—it's like a seat in the first row—and listens. Chatterton and Ouspenskaya recite their lines. Director Wyler makes his suggestions, talking softly. It is the new school of direction in Hollywood. The director doesn't shout; he doesn't try to show the actor how it should be done by playing the scene. Instead, he tells the performers what to do and what not to do, as if he were a critic. This is the method employed by Capra, Van Dyke and others.

Marie Ouspenskaya has a most interesting face and impressive voice. She walks with a cane. She wears a monocle, but not in the picture. She told everyone plenty about Hollywood, and now that she is here she wants to "go Hollywood." But no one could tell her exactly how to "go Hollywood." Now what really is "going Hollywood?" Perhaps you know and will tell?

It is hot on all the sound stages at Metro except one. And that is where Robert Taylor, Barbara Stanwyck and Jean Hersholt are playing a scene in what is supposed to be the sweltering South American jungle. The faces of the players have been sprayed with oil so they will appear on the screen to be feeling the heat. But this sound stage is cool and comfortable because it is the only one that is air cooled.

W. S. Van Dyke is directing this flicker, "His Brother's Wife," and Miss Stanwyck and Taylor, who have appeared together in photographs taken in restaurants and at openings, are together for the first time in a motion picture.

Jackie Cooper, Mickey Rooney and Freddie Bartholomew are among a group of boys doing a classroom sequence for "The Devil Is a Sissy." Sitting at the teacher's desk, playing the role of the teacher, is Mary Doran. Director Rowland Brown tells the kids—and they all look plenty tough—that he'll rehearse the scene a couple of times.

The kids are supposed to shoot spitballs at the teacher. They appear to enjoy their work. Mary Doran will tell you that they are good performers. The majority of the boys are not movie actors. They are delighted to be in a movie and they don't want to be too rough with Miss Doran or Cooper, Rooney and Bartholomew. They all have autograph books with them, and after a scene, they ask their celebrated classmates for their autographs.

Teacher Mary Doran is not very tall. "Picture me," she said, "bawling out Jackie Cooper and looking up at him." And pupil Jackie Cooper asked the teacher if he could take her out. That he'd call for her in his foreign make car.

Jean Harlow has returned to the camera for what is called "an additional scene" for the flicker, "Suzy." This sequence is the closing night of a show in London and Miss Harlow is consoling a chorus girl. The chorus girl is played by Alice Moore. She is the daughter of Tom Moore and Alice Joyce. This "additional scene," because it is about show business, was written by William Anthony McGuire, who, since "The Great Ziegfeld," is the Metro expert in such matters.

About The Showshops

ALTHOUGH the cast had not at that time been announced, we apparently made no mistake a few mornings ago in proclaiming that the "big-time" theater was coming to Washington this summer, even if only in broken doses. That statement was inspired by the booking of Harriet Hoctor for the Earle, the week of July 10, and Gene Ford's determination to present a revised and modernized version of the musical comedy, "Spring Is Here," at Loew's Fox, the week of July 24. Mr. Ford now reveals the cast of principals that may be expected to be seen in his opera.

BELL.

Ernest Truex, nationally known stage and screen star, has been signed for the principal comedy part in this item boasting a so-lilting score by Rodgers and Hart. In his support will be seen Ralph Magelson, tenor and leading man; Barbara Towns, who played a leading role in "The Great Waltz;" Alex Courtley, who succeeded Glenn Hunter in the play, "Young Woodley;" June Carr, popular comedienne; Chester Fredericks, talented juvenile, well known to Capital audiences; Lew Parker, in the role of Willie Slade, which he created in the original production; Dorothy Scott, Madelyn Kileen and Johnny Barnes, the local boy who won a talent contest here several months ago and since has been placed under contract by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. In addition to all these, there will be a Broadway beauty chorus of 20 agile young dancers.

Washington needs no introduction to Ernest Truex, the theater's perennial and apparently indestructible juvenile, until a slight rotundity about the midriff placed upon him the badge of a maturity just a shade the down-hill side of adolescence. Many among our resident theatergoers will remember Mr. Truex as far back as "The Good Little Devil," with Mary Pickford as the little blind girl, at the National back about 1913. Some will go back a decade and more before that to his appearance as Cedric in "Little Lord Fauntleroy" and surely no old-timer has forgotten the clever work he did as "The Dummy," about the time of the outbreak of the Great War.

Those with lesser memories will find it less difficult to recall him in the Theater Guild's comedy, "Jigsaw," of two or three seasons ago, with which the National closed its season. Few will especially care to remember that it was he who was with Walter Connolly in "Gather Ye Rosebuds," at the National last season. Floppo!

In engaging this facile gentleman for his cast, Mr. Ford has gone "big-time" in a big way, and don't let anybody tell you different.

It will be of interest to his hosts of friends here in the National Capital, where he and his Pennsylvanians received a considerable measure of the initial impetus that catapulted them to national fame among the country's foremost exponents of modern music, that Fred Waring yesterday morning became the inordinately proud daddy of a 7-pound son, born to his wife in New York City. The present Mrs. Waring was formerly Evalyn Nair, featured dancer with Waring's Pennsylvanians on their last two or three visits to local stages. This column adds its congratulations to those of Mr. and Mrs. John J. Payette, three up on the maestro; Mr. and Mrs. Joseph P. Morgan, Mr. and Mrs. Guy Wonders, George A. "Cotton" Crouch and all the others who helped boost Fred and the Pennsylvanians to eminence back in the dim ages when they were just a green collegiate band and could do with a little boosting, now and again. They were the feature of the first broadcast of the old Crandall Saturday Nighters, come to think of it. And now look at them. Henry Ford thinks they're good, too! The new baby probably will use a Lincoln for a perambulator.

You can just about catch Saturday's, if you start to walk now! . . . Getting a little nearer home, but not too near, at that, Sam Stratton drops the hint from Atlantic City that the Steel Pier goes on full summer schedule this week-end with a holiday scale of attractions every day of the week thenceforward . . . Everything from animal acts and Maj. Bowes' Amateurs to grand opera and a model home exhibit for one price of admission . . . Fred MacMurray, that former saxophone player who became a screen star almost before you could say "Rudy Wiedoft," exercised acute judgment in eloping to Las Vegas, Nev., with Lillian La Mont, according to the photographs . . . The former New York model is an eyeful . . . And that's no misprint for awful! . . . Anyhow, Fred's got a model wife, whether he has or not . . . "Under Two Flags" won't be taken off under two weeks at Loew's Columbia.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Chambersburg, Pa., June 23.—Accused of chewing the right ear of the Rev. Claude B. Tritch, of Hagerstown, Md., during an altercation Saturday, Fluford Fritz, 29, of near Sylvan, Franklin County, was arrested yesterday by State police on charges of assault and battery filed by Mr. Tritch before Justice of the Peace John S. Gillan.

Mrs. Mary Elizabeth Fritz, Fluford's wife, also was arrested on charges of assault and battery. Both she and her husband furnished bond for a hearing.

Mr. Tritch was said to have been on his way to Fulton County to preach at the time of the encounter at the Fritz home. Fritz accused the preacher of making false allegations about his obtaining money from one of two elderly blind women occupying the same house as the Fritz family.

Mrs. Fritz denied choking the preacher, but admitted pulling his hair, police said.

District Realty Board Stages Annual Outing

350 Members and Guests Attend Affair at Congressional Club.

Attended by more than 350 members and guests, the annual summer outing of the Washington Real Estate Board yesterday at Congressional Country Club was the most successful event of its kind held in the history of the local realtors' organization.

The day began with a tournament at 10 a. m. for golfing enthusiasts among the board members and guests. The main body of participants in the outing, however, did not leave for the club until 12:30 p. m. Its motor caravan assembled near the board's headquarters at 1417 K street northwest, and was accompanied to the scene by an escort of motorcycle police. It was welcomed by President F. Eliot Middleton, of the board, on arrival.

A day of baseball, bowling, horseshoe pitching, races, golf and tennis was concluded by a dinner served in the clubhouse at 6:30 p. m. It was followed by entertainment features. In addition to a handicap golf tournament, there was also a blind bogey competition.

Prizes for the sports events were contributed by five Washington daily newspapers, the Washington Gas Light Co., William H. Hessick & Son, Edgar Morris Sales Co., the Mayflower Hotel, F. Eliot Middleton, Thomas E. Jarrell Co., Harold E. Doyle, Fred A. Smith, Gude Bros., C. Heurich, jr., Schlosberg Jewelry Co., D. J. "Radio Joe" Kaufman, United Clay Products Co. and Joe Turner. Souvenirs were distributed by the District, Lawyers and Washington Title Insurance companies.

Ann Hewitt Wins $150,000 Bond Suit

San Francisco, June 23 (AP).—An out-of-court settlement for about $150,000 terminated tonight one phase of Ann Cooper Hewitt's sensational $500,000 suit against her mother, Mrs. Peter Cooper Hewitt, over the large estate left the 21-year-old heiress by her father.

Several months ago Miss Hewitt, in a suit against her mother, two physicians and others, claimed she had been duped into a sterilization operation in a plan to tighten her mother's hold on her estate.

Russell P. Tyler, Ann's attorney, announced today the United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. of Maryland had settled the little heiress' claim against the bond posted by the mother, as guardian of Ann's estate interst, for about $150,000.

In Baltimor, E. Asbury Davis, president of the concern, said the settlement was for "less than $150,000."

Tyler declared the settlement would in no way affect the $500,000 sterilization suit.

U. S. Plans Study Of Co-operatives

President Roosevelt is sending a commission to Europe this summer to get a "bird's-eye" view of the co-operative movement there, he revealed yesterday.

Jacob Baker, assistant works progress administrator, will head the group. He will be accompanied by Leland Olds, secretary of the New York State Power Association, and Charles E. Stuart, of the New York engineering firm of Stuart, James & Cook. They leave July 1, for a two-month study of co-operatives in Great Britain, Sweden, Denmark, Finland, Czechoslovakia, Switzerland, France and perhaps Hungary. The commission will submit a report of its findings to the Executive upon its return.

The President at his press conference said he has become immensely interested in the development of co-operative organizations in Europe. He declared he regards it as the complete answer to monopoly. He recently read "Sweden, the Middle Way," a new book on Swedish co-operatives by a Washington newspaper man, Marquis W. Childs, and the President said it had revived his interest in the movement to such an extent that he believed it would be well for this country to see what was going on there.

Filipinos Demand Earlier Freedom

Manila, P. I., June 23 (AP).—An appeal to the Democratic Party to advocate shortening the 10-year transition period to complete Philippine independence was sent to Philadelphia today by Segundo Agustin, secretary of the Philippine National Socialist Party.

Agustin's message, addressed to the chairman of the Democratic National Convention, said his party "headed by Gen. Aguinaldo, and other political groups, requests platform committee inclusion of a Philippine plank shortening the transition period specified in the Tydings-McDuffie law."

"Filipinos accepted that law," the message said, "relying upon President Roosevelt's promise of modifications."

Gen. Aguinaldo, leader of Philippine forces in the islands' rebellion against American rule at the turn of the century, has persistently advocated a shorter transition period.

Estate of Hauptmann Bequeathed to Widow

New York, June 23 (AP).—Bruno Richard Hauptmann, who was electrocuted for the kidnap-killing of the Lindbergh baby, left all his property and belongings to his widow, Anna, it was disclosed today.

Hauptmann's will, filed in Bronx Surrogate's Court yesterday and made out January 13, 1933, 20 months before his arrest, bequeathed, after deduction of all debts, funeral expenses and filing costs, "the residue of my estate to my beloved wife, Anna, to be hers and hers forever."

The court clerk said that Hauptman's estate amounted to less than $1,000. The will gave as his address the Bronx home where more than $14,000 in Lindbergh ransom [illegible] found.

The Cop Puts Himself on Spot

Edward Leads Birthday Pomp; Salutes Mother

By the Associated Press.

London, June 23.—Smiling King Edward VIII, bright in scarlet and gold, paused amid British birthday pageantry today to salute his mother.

Appears for First Time.

As her son clattered up to the parade ground he reined in quickly, turned and smiled up at the Queen Mother.

His white-gloved hand flashed to his headpiece in salute.

Then the troops marched and counter-marched in review to the rolling of drums, the skirling of bagpipes and the acclaim of thousands.

By rotation, the honor of trooping the colors—first birthday pageant of Edward's reign—fell today to the First Grenadier Guards.

Followed by Brothers.

Directly behind the King as he rode to parade were his three brothers, the Dukes of York, Gloucester and Kent; the Earl of Harewood, his brother-in-law; the Earl of Athlone, his uncle, and Prince Arthur of Connaught.

The Earl of Granard, Master of Horse, followed the royal riders with gold-sticks-in-waiting, equerries and the military members of the army council headed by the chief of the Imperial general staff, Field Marshal Sir Cyril J. Deverell.

Military attaches of the foreign powers rode after those from the dominions—a group in brilliant and highly varied uniforms, Japanese in black and gold, Indians in powder blue with turbans and glittering medals, the German attache very business-like in service kit and modern steel helmet.

Bands crashed out the royal salute and national anthem as the King rode onto the parade ground, where the troops had been massed to form a hollow square.

Rides Along Ranks.

After riding along the ranks, saluting from time to time, His Majesty took position at the saluting base and the 1,800 men on parade, their bayonets gleaming in the sun, moved as one to the music of massed bands.

The Royal Horse Guards—a brilliant splash of color in blue tunics with silvered breastplates and red plumes nodding from burnished helmets—were the first to leave the parade ground.

The field officer in brigade waiting rode up to the King, saluted with a sweep of his naked sword and, reporting "King's guard all present and correct," handed over the command to His Majesty.

King Edward led the parade along the sanded roadway of the Mall, where thousands more waited to cheer, back to Buckingham Palace and a last salute at the gates.

Customary ceremony marked the day at all army, navy and royal air force stations throughout the empire. Hundreds of congratulatory messages, among them telegrams from Reichsfuehrer Adolf Hitler of Germany and Emperor Hirohito of Japan, came to the royal palaces. A family luncheon at Buckingham and a dinner with friends at St. James' filled out the occasion.

'True Ad' Drive Called Success By Trade Group

Better Business Unit Head Files Report; Trustees Are Chosen.

Washington's Better Business Bureau, in its drive for "truth in advertising" and "integrity in business," has made definite strides forward during the year just completed, its members were informed at an annual meeting yesterday in the Raleigh Hotel.

A report by Joseph W. Marshall, recently appointed director of the bureau, and nominations for membership on the organization's board of trustees were the principal matters of business.

"Judging by the greatly increased number of inquiries during the year the bureau is becoming more and more important in the lives of our residents," Director Marshall declared.

A total of 9,307 inquiries on business practices and enterprises have been investigated and answered in the last 12 months, he reported. The number is 469 greater than the number of inquiries answered the previous year.

Marshall complimented Washington merchants and advertising agencies for maintaining ethical standards even though NRA codes were withdrawn early in the year.

"The removal of law had not tended toward a laxity of standards," the director pointed out. "On the contrary, bureau activity and results indicate an improved condition, bearing in mind the increase in advertising lineage during the present year."

Marshall cited numerous cases of business malpractice that had been investigated by the bureau this year, and routed. The bureau, he said, had worked in co-operation with the Federal Trade Commission, the Securities and Exchange Commission and other Federal agencies in exposing fakers.

The purpose of the Better Business Bureau, the director made clear, is to investigate, and in the field of financial investments it "does not recommend, suggest, indorse, or otherwise pass upon any financial institution."

Assisted Veterans.

"Our province is to answer with the facts and to properly interpret the facts; the inquirer can then form his own intelligent conclusion," said Marshall.

The bureau has been particularly active, according to the director, in behalf of the veterans who recently received their bonus. Through advertisements, radio talks and news stories the former soldiers were warned "against the swindlers endeavoring to cash in on their bonus."

Lanier P. McLachlen, chairman of the bureau, read the names of 29 Washington business houses that recently became affiliated with the bureau.

F. G. Addison, jr., chairman of the nominating committee, made the nominations report. It was unanimously adopted.

Andrew Saul and Charles H. St. John are new members of the board. Thirty-three other persons were re-elected to trusteeships. They are:

After the Max Baer-Joe Louis fiasco, I was criticized by some for assailing Baer as a coward . . . But turn back to my column of September 26, 1935, the day after the Baer fight and read the column of that day: "You can feel pity for Max Baer today, pity that he was too smart to get up and take a licking. In the years to come, however, I imagine that Baer will curse the one streak of intelligence that bobbed to the surface in a daffy career, for Maxie, to the end of time, must answer 'Here' when they call the roll of the ring's poltroons. The brighter pages of history do not occupy themselves with the guys who were smart enough to call 'quits' under fire. In the important crisis, you do not give a man an intelligence test. You listen for the beat of his heart. Baer's removal from the heavyweight ranks is trivial and unimportant, but it is important that the youngsters of the country do not conclude that there is high honor and laurel wreaths to the one who calls: 'Enough' . . . Schmeling proved that my estimate of Max Baer was terribly accurate.

Cotton Leads British Open Entrants

English Pro Shoots a 68, His Second Record Round in 2 Days.

By the Associated Press.

Hoylake, England, June 23.—Thomas Henry Cotton, it appeared tonight, once more is the man to beat for the British Open golf championship.

The tall, 29-year-old British pro of a Brussels club, winner of the title in 1934, fired his second record-breaking round in as many days as the bulky field of 286, including seven Americans headed by Gene Sarazen, completed the first 18 holes of the 36-hole qualifying round today.

Playing the gruelling, back-breaking Hoylake layout, now stretching 7,087 yards, Cotton, with all his shots under full control, set up a new competitive record of 68 for the lengthened course. Yesterday he had lowered the record for the neighboring Wallasey links to 67 only to have this spectacular performance washed from the score board by an electrical storm that forced the tournament committee to cancel all scores and order a new start.

Sarazen, who had carded a neat 71, 3 under par, at Hoylake earlier in the day, trailed along with the gallery of 3,000 who stormed the course to catch a glimpse of the British star as he played the finishing holes.

Sarazen's 71 left him in an excellent position for the final 18 holes of the qualifying round tomorrow, but no other American figured among the leaders and several were on the border line.

Ted Turner, of Pine Valley, N. J., played steadily to return a 74 at Wallasey, where Joe Ezar, the trick-shot Texan, took a 75 and T. Dennis Boardman, of South Hamilton, Mass., 79.

At Hoylake Willie Goggin, of San Francisco, used up 77 strokes and Errie Ball, of Mobile, Ala., 80. The seventh American entrant, Frank Ball, of Tannersville, N. Y., was all over the course at Hoylake and wound up with an 87 that means almost certain elimination.

Pair Tie for Medal In Real Estate Golf

With The Washington Post donating the championship trophy and all the golf prizes, W. M. Throckmorton and J. G. Pascoe turned in nets of 68, each, to tie for chief honors in the golf tournament sponsored by the Washington Real Estate Board yesterday at Congressional Country Club.

129 Women Enter Duffer's Tourney

A record field of 129 feminine golfers will compete tomorrow at Manor Club's course in the annual duffer championship, sponsored by the Women's District of Columbia Golf Association.

The tournament, 18 holes medal handicap, is open to any District golfer, but only players with a 16 handicap or above are eligible for the duffer's trophy. Attractive prizes for the low handicap golfers also will be given.

Elis Lead Collegiate Golf Play

Chicago, June 23 (AP).—Yale replaced Michigan as national intercollegiate team golf champion today, turning in a four-man total of 625 strokes for 36 holes. Stanford was second with 628.

Fred Haas, jr., of New Orleans and Louisiana State University, won the qualifying medal, scoring a fine one-under-par 71 today to add to his 75 of yesterday for a 32-hole total of 146. Herbert R. Eshelman of the victorious Yale team, was second to Haas with 75-73—148 for the two days, while Verne (Spec) Stewart of Stanford, had 77-72—149 for fourth place.

Willie Turnesa of the golfing Turnesa family, playing for Holy Cross, brought in a par 72, giving him 151 and fourth place.

White Sox Rout Yanks' Mound Staff, 13-4

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, June 23.—The White Sox beat the sluggers of the New York Yankees at their own game today, clubbing three pitchers for 13 hits and a 13 to 4 victory over the league leaders.

A nine-run barrage off Walter Brown and Ted Kleinhans in the sixth broke a three-all deadlock and put the game on ice.

Vernon Kennedy, turning in his eighth victory of the season, held the Yanks to nine hits, three of them by Lou Gehrig.

The defeat cut the Yanks' league lead to 4½ games over the Boston Red Sox, who won their game today.

The Sox drew first blood in today's encounter, scoring a run without getting a hit in the third inning, when George Selkirk dropped Luke Sewell's fly, and the latter came home on a sacrifice and Rip Radcliff's ground ball to second.

The Yanks came back in the fourth with a three-run splurge, when the Sox blew up momentarily afield and committed two errors, allowing the New Yorkers to produce runs on singles by Gehrig and Jake Powell.

Old Timers Play Game of Baseball A La 1876, Today

Boston, June 23 (U.P.).—Baseball as played six decades ago will live again for a day tomorrow when two "old time" teams oppose each other at National League Field prior to the scheduled Chicago Cubs-Boston Bees game.

The occasion will mark the sixtieth anniversary of the National League of Professional Baseball Clubs of which the Chicago and Boston clubs are the only continuous members.

Rules which existed in 1876 will prevail, which means, among other things, that the pitcher must throw underhanded, the home team bats first, foul bounce is out, the umpire calls his decisions from a chair, etc. Mustachios and uniforms of ancient vintage also will be part of the scenery.

A's Halt Rally And Conquer Tribe, 8-6

By the Associated Press.

Cleveland, June 23.—The Philadelphia Athletics stopped a ninth-inning rally, begun by Hal Trosky's seventeenth home run of the season and took the second game of their series with Cleveland today, 8 to 6.

The Indians did not solve Rookie Lee Ross' delivery until the waning minutes of the game. Gordon (Dusty) Rhodes replaced him with two out in the ninth and walked Frankie Pytlak to fill the bases. With two balls on Ralph Winegarner, Joe Fink took the hill and the Indian pitcher flied out.

Miss Miley Sets Pace in Links Tourney

By the Associated Press.

Denver, June 23.—Marion Miley, defending champion from Lexington, Ky., led favored players safely through the first round of the Women's Trans-Mississippi Golf tournament today.

The imperturbable brunette set a pace which most of her leading rivals followed in crushing Mrs. J. L. Bailey, of Emporia, Kans., 7 and 6.

Miss Miley was one over par for the 12 holes. She scored birdies on the third, ninth and twelfth.

Patty Berg, determined little redhead from Minneapolis, who tied for medal honors yesterday with Mrs. Dan Chandler, of Dallas, at 74, lost only one hole and halved only two in trimming gray-haired Mrs. Channing Folsom, of Kansas City, 8 and 6.

Mrs. Chandler traveled two under par in winning, 7 and 6 from Mrs. Ben Grimes, of Denver.

Helen Hofmann, Utah champion from Salt Lake City, rattled off the best golf of the day in eliminating Jean Saint, of Kansas City, 7 and 6. The tall Utah youngster, out in 39, was three under par.

Favorites Win In English Net Play

Helen Jacobs Only U. S. Woman to Score; Mrs. Fabyan Beaten.

By the Associated Press.

Wimbledon, England, June 23.—Except for Mrs. Sarah Palfrey Fabyan, of Brookline, Mass., seeded players and teams in the women's singles and the men's doubles of the all-England tennis championships triumphed today as form prevailed in the opening rounds of these divisions of play.

Mrs. Fabyan, graded behind Dorothy Round and Helen Jacobs in the seeding, hit a snag in the machine-like German star, Marie Louise Horn, going down in straight sets, 6—3, 7—5, and leaving Miss Jacob's America's lone major threat for the championship Mrs. Helen Wills Moody decided not to defend.

The American served a double-faults repeatedly and in her eagerness to shake Fraulein Horn's robot-like steadiness she ran into a streak of overhitting to the corners, trying to catch the German player out of position.

Apparently having regained her form after her lapse in the Wightman Cup matches, Miss Jacobs, four-times American champion, made short work of Miss M. Cable, winning 6—1, 6—0. Likewise, did Miss Round play at her peak in disposing of the formidable Betty Nutall, 9—7, 6—3. On their showings today Miss Jacobs and Miss Round are favored to meet in the final for the title Miss Round captured two years ago. Mrs. Dorothy Andrus, of New York, defeated Miss Gethin-Harry, 6—4, 8—6.

All of the favored combinations won in straight sets in the men's doubles. Adrian Quist and Jack Crawford, of Australia, defending champions, defeated Ladislaw Hecht and Josef Caska, of Czechoslovakia, 6—3, 6—3, 7—5; Wilmer Allison and John Van Ryn, American titlists, defeated the Hungarians, Garbowitz and Van Planner, 6—2, 6—3, 6—2; Donald Budge and Gene Mako, of California, outlasted Christian Boussus and Bernard Destremeau, of France, 6—3, 13—11, 6—4, and the British Davis Cup team, Pat Hughes and Charley Tuckey, defeated the Norwegians, J. Haanes and F. Jennssen, 6—4, 6—4, 6—0.

Those Max Schmeling Blues

Associated Press WIREPHOTO.

Louis Anxious to Prove Kayo By Max Was Just a Mistake

By the Associated Press.

Detroit, June 23.—Joe Louis drove the "blues" away with his favorite mouth organ today and said he wants to climb into a ring for another fight soon.

The "bombed Bomber" disclosed his No. 1 choice for an opponent would be Max Schmeling, the German who kept a right hand in his face for nearly 12 rounds before knocking him out at New York last week.

The dusky boxer sprawled at ease in the apartment of his business manager, John Roxborough, and said he believed he could stop that right in another meeting, that he would have stopped it last Thursday if Max hadn't dazed him with a hard right smash in the second round.

Roxborough and the young Negro heavyweight who suffered his first professional knockout only four days ago, are not talking in terms of a "comeback."

"Joe is the same fighter he always was," Roxborough said, "still the greatest boxing draw in the country."

Louis, before leaving tonight to "sleep, loaf and maybe play a little golf" at the Stevensville, Mich., farm of Julian Black, another manager, expressed his desire to fight again "as soon as he (Roxborough) can line up an opponent."

Roxborough said nothing would be done until the proposed title fight between Schmeling and Jim Braddock, the champion, is decided on.

Joe would like to fight in August in Detroit, where he started his sensational rise in the heavyweight ranks. Al Ettore, who whipped Leroy Haynes for the third time at Philadelphia Monday, tops the present prospects.

Aside from his blackened eye, Louis' only marks of his encounter with Schmeling are two swollen thumbs. Joe said he took everything the German had to offer in the first round at New York without being hurt, only to be dazed by the hard right smash in the second. After that, he said, "I was so shaken I couldn't get any power into my own punches."

Women Golfers Victors Over Richmond

An all-star team of 12 women golfers from Richmond proved easy for the District team, captained by Mrs. N. J. Waldron, yesterday at the Woodmont Country Club, as the local players won, 14½ to 3½, in the four-ball competition.

The District twosomes swept four of the six matches, Mrs. Elsie Haynes, of Congressional, and Mrs. Bishop Hill, of Chevy Chase, taking 2½ points from Mrs. Thomas Priddy and Miss Lillian Wood, of the visitors, in the feature match.

The two-ball matches will be held this morning at 9:30 at Chevy Chase.

Gain in Race As Miscues Hurt Foe

Pitchers Fare Poorly on Mound and Also Add to Errors.

By Shirley Povich.
Sports Editor of The Post.

St. Louis, June 23. — The Nats spent the day with friends here in Sportsman's Park and were shown into third place in the American League standings, passing the backsliding Detroit Tigers and Cleveland Indians en route.

The friendliness of the Browns took the form of six large and luscious St. Louis errors, with a wild pitch and a passed ball chucked in for good measure, and the Nats made away with the ball game by the highly conclusive score of 10 to 5.

With Ben Chapman running the Browns' pitchers, catchers and infielders dizzy, the Nats collaborated with the Browns in presenting Jimmy DeShong with his ninth victory of the season. DeShong personally was no raging success out there on the mound with his 12-hit pitching, but he outlasted three St. Louis hurlers.

A St. Louis error figured in each of the Nats' six scoring innings, but the Browns' pitchers were in no position to squawk against their supporting cast. Three of the St. Louis boots were contributed by the pitchers themselves, who didn't do half badly while they were pitching to the batters, but when they started pitching to the bases, they pitched the ball game away.

But Chapman was enough to give 'em the jitters. He got on base four times in his five appearances at the plate. He stole two bases and he scored three runs. Here's the inning-by-inning account of Chapman's marauding:

First inning—Chapman walked. Chapman stole second. Chapman went to third when Lary muffed Lewis' grounder. Chapman scored on Kuhel's single.

Third inning—Chapman grounded out.

Fifth inning—Chapman singled to center. Earl Caldwell tried to pick Chapman off first, threw the ball into the dirt, and Chapman raced to second. Chapman stole third. Chapman scored on Lewis' double to right.

Eighth inning—Chapman walked. Unable to steal second because second was occupied, Chapman perished on first when Lewis struck out.

DeShong couldn't hold his 2-0 lead beyond the second inning, but found himself in possession of a 4-2 lead again in the fourth when, with the bases full, Caldwell caught Bolton's smash into the box and in an attempt to double Stone off third base, threw the ball into the Browns' dugout and let 2 runs score.

It was 6-2 after the fifth when Chapman singled, Lewis doubled and Stone singled, and with DeShong parceling out runs only one at a time to the Browns, the 4 runs the Nats scored by various means in the last four innings were entirely superfluous.

Silvery Cloud Wins Charles Town Feature; Noajoyce Pays $52

Daily Double Nets $96.20 Mutuel

Princess Wrack Worth $38.60 in 2d; Sea Finn 2d in Feature.

By Walter Haight.

A Staff Correspondent.

Charles Town, W. Va., June 23.—The firm of Feltner, Feltner, Feltner and Silvery Cloud accounted for the feature race at the Charles Town Jockey Club, Inc., this afternoon. Silvery Cloud deserves the most credit, for she did the running that brought the purse. C. M. Feltner gets an assist for having trained Silvery Cloud. His nephew, Jimmy, comes in for credit for the fine ride he put up on the gray filly, and his son, Claude, had reason to smile, for his name is listed on the program as the owner—perhaps because papa is in charge of the tractors that level the track.

The public was more than passingly interested, for it installed Silvery Cloud as a lukewarm favorite. She ran the six and one-half furlongs in the creditable time of 1:21 4-5 and paid a $6.06 mutuel. It was actually cold here in the mountains today. The clouds were sagging all afternoon, but the rain held off until the last stages of the program and the racing was conducted over a fast track. There were long shots enough to warm the hearts of the bettors who must have heavy odds with their racing.

Sea Fin was second to Silvery Cloud in the feature by a half length margin, with Love Lost third and two lengths away. It was Sea Finn which bounded to the front when Starter Red Palmer waved the fillies away. However, Silvery Cloud was close up. At the far turn, the two joined, team fashion and ran that way to the stretch. In the straightaway, Silvery Cloud packed the necessary punch. She bounded along to Feltner's urging and was drawing clear of Sea Finn at the wire.

The victory of Princess Wrack in the second race at a $38.60 mutuel, paved the way for a daily double of $96.20. The finishing touches were put on by Doreen, winner of the third race in the role of a $5.60 favorite.

The longest individual price of the day came on Noajoyce, a son of Noah, which suddenly decided to run today and romped off with a race named "The Dear Al" to pay a $52 mutuel, NATURES DREAM, off alertly, took command going to the first turn, saved ground and held away thereafter. WALTZ KING raced on the outside most of the way and closed wanely. WHITE CLOUD gained steadily throughout the running and closed gamely. TODY CON pressed the pace to the stretch and faltered slightly and probably needed the race. OAKHURST broke on top, dropped back and went evenly thereafter. MISS NOBBY had early speed.

PRINCESS WRACK, outrun to the stretch, went to the leaders under a drive and was going away at the end. GOLDEN DOT wrested the lead from ABITIBI going to the far turn, saved ground entering the stretch and closed willingly, but was unable to resist the winner. ABITIBI was bothered by TETRA DOMINO at the stretch turn and closed courageously and appeared to have been second. WARNED OFF was going well in the stretch. TETRA DOMINO came up on the outside to take command swinging for the stretch, but went to the outside fence and broke down after the finish.

DOREEN assumed command at the first turn, drew out to a long lead on the backstretch, withstood a challenge from TRYLUBRIA when entering the stretch and then drew out. TRYLUBRIA started from outside the gates, gained steadily to the stretch turn, then hung, but was second best. MERSAN pressed the early pace and tired in the closing sixteenth. MONOCACY was always well up and had no excuses. MR. MELVIN could not reach contention at any stage. TUSCAN WORTH was pulled up when hopelessly beaten.

Allie Ritzenberg Beats Harry March for D. C. Junior Net Title

Team Laurels Go to Sokol, Matthews

By John R. Vosburgh.

Wily Allie Ritzenberg conquered adverse conditions and Harry March, versatile Tech High athlete, yesterday to win the City of Washington Junior tennis championship in straight sets at the Edgemoor Club, 7-5, 6-4, 6-1.

Despite a soggy court, it was a much better match than Allie and his brother Nate put on at Georgetown University in the finals of the interscholastic championships. March put Allie to the acid test in the first two sets and Allie answered in fine fashion, establishing himself as a dangerous threat to win the Middle Atlantic Junior championship to be held in Baltimore this week.

The victory made Ritzenberg Junior titleholder in both singles and doubles. Paired with Davie Johnsen of Roosevelt High, he gained the team title with a five-set upset victory over March and Charlie Channing, of Central High.

In the finals of the boys doubles, Leonard Sokol, singles champion, and Byron Matthews defeated Taylor Chewning, of Leland Junior High, and Tom Wadden, of Western, 6—0, 2—6, 6—1.

Heurichs Take First Half in Industrial

Some unlooked for generosity on the part of the Coffey Sales team helped the Heurich Brewers considerably yesterday in winning the first half of the Industrial League of The Post Association. The Beermen took a 9-5 decision from their rival on the Ellipse to win the two-out-of-three game series for the title.

The Coffey Sales pitching was ordinary at best, and the Brewers took advantage of the situation with gusto. Nine bases on balls were bestowed on the Beermen by Jack Hudson, Coffey Sales pitcher, who also threw in three wild pitches for good measure. Heurich's won the first game of the series, Monday, 6 to 5, in ten innings.

The week-day champions of The Post Association had Shout Taylor on the mound, who held the opposition to seven hits. Huck Stahl, veteran Heurich catcher, led the offensive, getting a perfect day at bat with a single, triple and home run.

Ritzenberg Takes a March

Harry March (left), Tech High track and tennis star, congratulates Allie Ritzenberg after the latter had beaten him 7—5, 6—4, 6—1, yesterday at the Edgemoor Club to win the City of Washington Junior net championship.

This Morning . . .

With Shirley Povich.

St. Louis, Mo., June 23.

Rogers Hornsby would be the last to make any cracks about his very good friend, Mickey Cochrane, but it is slightly difficult for Mr. Hornsby to comprehend Cochrane's enforced absence from the Tigers.

Continual worry over the decline of his Detroit club and the injuries to his regulars is ascribed as the reason for Cochrane's physical breakdown that has necessitated a vacation in the wilds of Wyoming in mid-season. The strain of attempting to get his Tigers back in the pennant race has been too much for Cochrane, his Detroit biographers would have you believe.

POVICH.

Pittle says Hornsby, who inquires what Cochrane's state of mind and health might be if he had to put up with such problems as Hornsby has worried along with on the last-place Browns. If Cochrane, directing a team that has just won two pennants, had to worry, like Hornsby, about where his next pitcher was coming from, or his next base hit, then there would be excuse for a physical collapse, opines the Browns' manager.

And then again, there's Rollie Hemsley. Cochrane, with his Tigers, has no Hemsley to contend with. Hornsby points out. Young Mr. Hemsley, it seems, is no less than a worry-wart to a manager. Hornsby had him years ago with the Cubs and had to fire him to keep peace on the team. And exactly five years ago this week, according to the Sporting News, Hornsby was forced to punish the irresponsible Hemsley by catching him in batting practice despite the fact that he was the club's regular catcher. Hemsley had been keeping hours usually associated with the dawn patrol.

Five years and Hemsley ain't changed much. His fun-loving nature caused him separate fines of $150 and $300 within a week. Hemsley's idea of fun apparently does not coincide with Hornsby's.

Hornsby could see nothing funny on a recent road trip when Hemsley brought along a basket of frogs from his Missouri farm and carefully secreted 'em in the Pullman sheets of the players' train berths. The amphibians began hopping and the players were hopping mad, including Hornsby, who hadn't escaped Hemsley's idea of fun.

The Duseks Four to Fill Half The Bill at Stadium Tomorrow

Eight hundred and ninety pounds of rassleflesh, Dusek brand, will be exposed to the glare of Griffith Stadium floodlights and Washington mat fans tomorrow night. A large portion of the weight which Rudy, Emil, Ernie and Joe share among themselves is likely to be unloaded in the laps of such daring spectators as will sit in the immediate neighborhood of the ring.

Such is the riotous reputation of the Dusek tribe. The Duseks hold to the custom of remaining within the ring about as closely as the Dionnes to the one-child custom. The net result has found them often carrying their conflicts to battlefields extending beyond the confines of the ring. At one time, it is reported, one of the boys ended up around second base.

Billed as the "Dangerous Duseks," the "Discontented Duseks," the "Duseks With the Rowdy Reputation," etc., they have made it an old family custom to live up to advance notices, thereby becoming probably the most colorful family act since Swiss Family Robinson.

With due respect for the oldest member of the troupe, the feature event has been allotted to venerable Rudy, who will throw his aged 35-year-old frame into action against Josephus Cox, the Dusek family's own special nemesis.

It will be to a one-fall finish, thus giving Mr. Cox full opportunity to carry out the threat to score a grand slam over the Duseks. Already he has drubbed Ernie, Emil and Joe in that sequence.

Careful not to afford the Duseks anything in the nature of a sacrifice, Promoter Joe Turner has gone to the other extreme and selected four such individuals who may conceivably sacrifice the Duseks. For instance, Ernie must face wild George Koverly in another one-fall finish and 31-year-old Emil collides with Flying Tackle Gus Sonnenberg.

Infant Joe, a mere youngster of 25 summers and 3 winters in Florida, takes on the formidable Hank Barber in the other match, which, like Emil's, will be over the 30-minute time limit route.

Altrock, Ward Eliminated at Rock Creek

Co-medalists Are Ousted in First and Second Rounds.

Nick Altrock, the cigar-puffing comedian-coach of the Washington baseball club, and Frank Ward, who tied for the medal with 73's in the Rock Creek Open golf championship, were eliminated in yesterday's first and second-round firing.

Altrock, whose "dogs" haven't been so good of late, and who admits that 36 holes a day is too much for an "old man," put out L. C. Hogan, 3 and 1 in the morning, but was put away by the hot sticks of Herman Allen in the afternoon, 6 and 5.

Joining Allen in the semifinals were Milford Stein, the 15-year-old fat boy who is really playing some hot golf; Andy Oliveri, chubby-faced District junior municipal champion, and Harold Bowers, former Anacostia Open title holder.

Two Close Calls.

Stein had two close calls, defeating George Seitz, 2 and 1, and providing a real upset by conquering Eddie Stolark, one up. The fat fellow was two down and three to go to Stolark, and finished, 4—3—4, even par.

Oliveri won from M. O'Connor, 2 and 1, and Harry (Stymie) Yates, one up, only a trapped tee shot prevented Yates from carrying the match to the nineteenth hole. Oliveri got a 74 and Yates a 76.

Bowers won his first match by default, and was only a few strokes over par in defeating George Keene, two up. Out in 34, Bowers was only 1 over fours for the next nine holes.

The semifinals and finals will be played today, Allen meeting Stein at 9:45, and Oliveri facing Bowers at 9:50.

Cronin's Home Run Nets Sox 7-6 Victory

By the Associated Press.

Detroit, June 23.—Boston's Red Sox overcame a 4-run deficit today to defeat the Detroit Tigers, 7 to 6, and even the series despite the efforts of Al Simmons, who hit two home runs and a single, batting in 5 runs.

Manager Joe Cronin led the Boston attack with a single, double and home run, his circuit clout in the eighth counting the winning run. Jimmie Foxx drove out his nineteenth home run of the season in the sixth inning to tie the score.

France Lowers Discount Rate To 5 Per Cent

Rise in Francs Permits Reduction From 6 Per Cent.

By the Associated Press.

Paris June 23.—The Bank of France today lowered its discotint rate from 6 per cent to 5 per cent.

The discount rate reached 6 per cent May 6, when it was raised to that figure from 5 per cent in an effort to halt withdrawals of gold from the bank's vaults.

Today the bank also lowered the rate on loans covered by securities to 6 per cent from 8 per cent. The rate on 30-day loans was lowered to 5 per cent from 6 per cent.

The decision to lower the rates, taken at an extraordinary meeting of the bank's board of regents, followed a rise in quotations on the franc in the world's foreign exchange markets.

The rise in the franc was attributed to the speech of Vincent Auriol, minister of finance, June 19, in which he attacked devaluationists and threatened action against secret gold exporters in an effort to bring French gold back to France.

The high discount rate, intended to check the drain of gold from the bank, has been hindering business and industry by making loans costly.

While the rate of 9 per cent for advances on gold was kept unchanged in order to discourage gold hoarding, the bank regents took advantage of the first lessening of the tension on the franc in weeks to lighten the other rates.

A Czechoslovakian, Georges Tovbetz, was ordered expelled from France today in the first action against gold "speculators." It was said his expulsion order came as a result of a check on gold exporters at Le Bourget Airport.

New York, June 23 (AP).—The action of the Bank of France today reducing its discount rate from 6 to 5 per cent is accepted in most Wall street circles as indicating that the fourth wave of gold exports from that country has receded below the danger point.

With an unbalanced budget and the disequilbrium of francs with world prices, another wave is expected sooner or later. The Bank of France is still well prepared to meet such a demand, having more than $3,600,000,000 in gold in its vaults.

The Market

Stocks Lower; Francs Decline With Reduced Bank Rate.

New York, June 23.—Uncertain price movements with moderate trading activity made up the financial markets. Bond prices were mixed and the majority of active stocks lost a little by closing. Turnover in stocks was less than 1,000,000 shares. September wheat rose a quarter of a cent to 96⅛ cents a bushel.

Opening dealings in stocks brought out many thousand share blocks and some fair advances. It soon became apparent that each trader preferred to wait for another to carry on from that point, and the market developed a sideways movement, with moderate activity. Chrysler was the feature of the early business opening at 105, a new high price, going ahead a little more and then receding a point on profit taking.

International Nickel was another active stock at the start, but it lacked stamina in the afternoon. When Steel and a few other industrial stocks of influence began to soften the market as a whole turned irregular and remained that way during the greater part of the day.

Railroad shares were at no time active and losses of a fraction to a point were the rule. Trading converged on Santa Fe, Union Pacific and Great Northern. A few of the so-called idependent steel stocks moved up. Youngstown reached a new high price. Inland developed strength. Chemicals stiffened. Allied jumped 4 points, but ceded most of it. American Power securities jutted one in the utility sector. Consolidated Edison found its market narrow. Telephone lost a point, as did Western Union. Conditions were poorer for the amusements, motor accessories, rail equipments, metals, foods and oils.

Francs and Gold.

In the foreign exchange market the recent strength of francs, on the reassuring if peculiar statement of position by Premier Blum, gave way to the old condition of weakness. At the same time sterling hardened, indicating a resumption of the flight of capital from Paris. The event of the day was the lowering of the Bank of France's discount rate from 6 per cent to 5 per cent. That action marked abandonment of traditional central bank policy of gold control. As the gold exodus increased the Bank of France had liftid its discount rate.

Little more than a gesture was understood from the increase, as capital was leaving France mainly because of distrust of the radical party and the growing belief in devalution of the franc. That belief is now held more strongly than ever. It scarcely could be otherwise, with the new French government advocating higher wages, higher costs, greater state expendi tures and all the other paraphernalia, of "reflation," as the timid economists in England and this country used to call it.

The Bank of France now has a mere figurehead as its governor, one without banking experience and one set up to carry out government desires. Consequently the bank has put down its discount rate to assist in a busines recovery which a growing number of people in France thing can better be brought about with a cheap money policy and state spending than with further deflation in an attempt to maintain the franc on the gold standard. To all practical intents the franc already has been divorced from gold.

Tax Collectors.

Markets could find no comfort in the words used to open the Democratic convention at Philadelphia, but they scarcely had expected any. The same old animosity toward business enterprise and the accumulation of dollars was shown to be the guiding principle of the New Dealers. Throughout the world the forces of economic recovery are strong, and they need to be to surmount the many obstacles placed in the way of politicians. In this country the chances seem to favor further development, but in future the task of keeping income is going to be a far more difficult one than that of gettig it.

Banking Position.

Taking up the tax date loans of the Treasury gave the week's condition report of member banks of the Federal Reserve System a heavy list to the investment side. Holdings of Government bonds rose nearly half a billion, and large payments for cash reduced reserves by more than $800,000,000. Many out-of-town banks took up their bonds by giving the Treasury the usual book credit, and consequently for the total member banks Government deposits rose $110,000,000 in the face of a degline of $246,000,000 for demand deposits. As already reported, loans on securities declined. Commercial loans also were reduced moderately.

Foreign Trade.

Foreign trade figures for May, a little late this time, show the first export excess for the year. A four months run with an unfavorable trade balance set up a record for recent years for this country and reflected our policy of economic scarcity which resulted in heavy importation of foodstuffs and reduced shipments of our higher costing manufactured articles and raw materials. Exports in May were $201,000,000 and imports were $191,000,000. Both figures were considerably in excess of those for the same month of last year, in which the import excess was $5,000,000. Compared with April, the shifting of the balance came from a decline of imports of $11,000,000 along with a rise in exports of $8,000,000.

Out of Balance.

To say that our foreign trade is now running a favorable balance is to leave out important factors. For the first five months our merchandise imports were $3,300,000 in excess of exports, and we also imported a net of $92,300,000 in silver. That also is a commodity which we are acquiring to lift the price of the home mined product and properly should be regarded as an item in foreign trade. In spite of the fact that for many months we have been buying abroad more than we have been selling, gold has continued to come this way in a deep stream. The cause of that has been harassment of capital abroad. In the first five months of this year our net gold imports were $232,000,000, but so far the accumulating gold has been kept from performing its natural function of credit expansion. Once nature begins to take its course a rise in commodity prices is likely to occur.

On the basis of current market value for Inland shares the deal will involve about $5,605,000.

Profit-Taking Checks Climb In Wheat Price

Heavy Selling Wipes Out Early Advance of 2½ Cents a Bushel.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, June 23.—Culminating 14 cents a bushel advance in two weeks, wheat late today reacted sharply under big sales to realize profits at season top price records.

Overnight fresh gains that amounted to 4 cents at Minneapolis were virtually wiped out for at least the time being. The new soaring of prices whirling the Chicago wheat futures market up temporarily 2½ cents to within a fraction of $1 for December contracts accompanied the most sensational crop damage reports yet received from the Dakotas, Montana and Minnesota.

The Mortgage contains provisions for the issuance, under certain conditions and restrictions, of additional bonds of other series, without limitation as to principal amount, ranking pari passu with these Bonds and provides for the release of property from the lien thereof without notice other than application in certain instances to the Trustee.*

The Mortgage contains provisions for the establishment of an annual Amortization and Bond Redemption Fund commencing with the year 1942. For a description of such Fund, including the amount of the annual payments thereto which may be made by the Company, and the application of such payments, reference is made to the Offering Prospectus and to the provisions of the Mortgage filed as an Exhibit to the Registration Statement.

Paper Defends Strike Beatings At Earle, Ark.

Asserts Labor Is Plentiful, Assails 'Outsiders' for Interference.

By the Associated Press.

Memphis, Tenn., June 23.—The Earle (Ark.) Enterprise said today a strap "applied where it would do the most good" has rid the east Arkansas cotton area of outside "agitators."

"There is no strike at Earle," the newspaper said. It was near there that Miss Willie Sue Blagden, 29, of Memphis, and the Rev. Claude C. Williams, 41, of Little Rock, said they were flogged.

The paper asserted that labor is plentiful at 75 cents a day and that tenants and planters will harvest their crops and make money "if they are unmolested by those who should be home attending to their own business."

H. L. Mitchell, secretary of the Southern Tenant Farmers Union, first issued a call for a strike among cotton choppers in east Arkansas, demanding $1.50 a day. He later asserted sharecroppers joined the strike.

Has Produced Results.

The "sting" of the "backband," the Enterprise said, "has produced results where all other remedies less drastic have failed."

"The greatest hue and cry arises from the fact that a white woman was forced to endure a light whipping," it said, continuing that while "it is hard to condone the action," there is "no doubt but that the woman was completely out of her place."

Miss Blagden and Williams said they were whipped when they attempted to verify reports that Frank Weems, 40, colored sharecropper, had "died" of a "beating." Sheriff Howard Curlin promised to produce Weems alive "to show up this hoax."

Condones Whipping.

"It condones the whipping of a woman and it exults in labor having to work for 75 cents a day," said Thomas, adding that the answer should be given "by Senator Joe Robinson (Arkansas), the chairman of the Democratic convention, the representative and beneficiary of the system which the Enterprise eulogizes," and by President Roosevelt, "who eulogized Joe Robinson on his recent visit to Arkansas."

The newspaper called attention to the fact that Williams was fined once in Arkansas for his labor activities, but added "it didn't stop him from his hobby of agitating labor."

"It is hoped that his punishment in Earle will have better results," it said.

Organizers of the sharecroppers were accused of acting "for what money they could get out of those who would join the union."

Summer Camp Will Be Named For Maj. Brown

The board of managers of the Boys Club of the Metropolitan Police, in a dinner session at the National Press Club last night, voted to name the new 160-acre summer home of the organization, near Scotland, Md., "Camp Ernest W. Brown," in honor of the Superintendent of Police.

At the same meeting, which was presided over by the chairman, John A. Remon, a unanimous vote was cast providing a series of 50 or more summer vacations for underprivileged boys at the Y. M. C. A. colored home at Camp Lichtman, Md.

A revised summary of cash receipts of the membership campaign revealed that $63,599 has been raised up to date. The report was prepared by Ray C. Thompson and submitted to the board by James E. Colliflower, campaign chairman.

More than 2,000 youngsters, members of the Boys Club, and their invited guests from the Washington Boys Club, the Merrick Boys Club, the Northeast Boys Club and the Georgetown Boys Club will be entertained at an all-day swimming and luncheon party by the management of the Airport Pool today.

The boys will be taken at 10 a. m. in front of the station house of the Fifth Precinct to the pool in a specially chartered fleet of city cabs. Bill Levy, manager of the pool, will be host and provide luncheons.

Strikebreakers Imported, Auto Hearing Is Told

'Employment Agency' Set Up by Garages, Labor Trial Brings Out.

Washington automobile dealers have set up an employment agency which has brought mechanics from nearby States to offset the current strike, evidence offered before a National Labor Relations Board examiner yesterday indicated.

This development marked the final hearing on charges of unfair labor practices brought by the local union of machinists against the Nolan Motor Co.

Daniel M. Lyons, the trial examiner, announced he would submit an opinion to the regional board in Baltimore.

Last witness of the day was W. H. Buri, summoned by Jacob Blum, N. L. R. B. trial attorney.

He testified he operated an employment agency for the Washington Automotive Trade Association at 1311 G street northwest and interviewed applicants for positions at the request of various dealers. His position was recently created, Buri said.

He advertised both in Washington and out-of-town newspapers, he asserted, bringing mechanics in from as far away as North Carolina and South Carolina.

Nolan attorneys objected strenuously to this evidence.

It is charged specifically that two Nolan employes were discharged when they refused to sign allegiance to the Nolan Employes' Beneficial Association, which is alleged to have repudiated a proposed agreement between the company and the union.

Vast Tax Bill Becomes a Law; Others Signed

28 Measures Approved in Addition to Plan to Raise $800,000,000.

By the Associated Press.

The $800,000,000 tax bill, which last week was holding up adjournment of Congress, became law yesterday when it was signed by President Roosevelt.

Incorporating some entirely new tax principles, the act, which is a compromise between House and Senate theories, goes far toward carrying out Mr. Roosevelt's suggestions for stiff levies on corporation income withheld from stockholders.

Opponents of the new law argued it would injure corporations which need surpluses for "rainy day" and other uses, while its advocates contend it will force undisturbed corporate profits into the hands of stockholders subject to individual income taxes.

28 Other Bills Signed.

The President signed 28 other measures, including the $114,000,000 Interior Department appropriation bill, and cleared his desk of major legislation passed by the Congress which adjourned early Sunday morning.

Among the resolutions signed were those providing for arrangements for the Presidential inauguration ceremonies and the opening of the new Congress next January.

Some Measures Rejected.

He refused to sign an act to establish a hurricane patrol in the Gulf of Mexico, asserting the Coast Guard and Weather Bureau had advised him that, although in some instances valuable reports might be obtained, the practicability of the project was "decidedly questionable and its cost would be totally disproportionate to the value of the reports which might be anticipated."

He also withheld approval of a bill to allow Federal judges to spend up to $10 a day while traveling on official duties.

"I am withholding my approval of this measure because I feel that the proposed allowance to United States judges for actual subsistence expenses of not to exceed $10 a day is too high when compared with subsistence allowances to personnel in other branches of the Federal service," he said. Other officials are allowed $5 a day.

The other bills he turned down were for the relief of individuals.

4-H Club Members Give Yearly Party

As a climax to a day spent in seeing the sights of Washington, delegates to the 4-H Club encampment held their annual party at the United States Chamber of Commerce Building last night.

Dancing was the order of the evening and the boys and girls from the Nation's farmlands greeted the waltz, fox-trot and the old-fashioned Paul Jones. Music was supplied by the United States Marine Band Orchestra.

During the afternoon the delegates visited Washington Cathedral and Smithsonian Institute. Today they will go to Mount Vernon, where two of their number, Augusta McDonald, of Mississippi, and David Perry, of New Hampshire, will lay a wreath on the tomb of Washington.
